Funds Drive By Hospitals Of District Considered

Appeal to Congress Also Studied as Deficits Mount and Chest Falls Short

Welfare Burden Added

SHORTAGE of Community Chest funds imposes added burden on inadequate public welfare services. Page 19.

INAUGURATION profit will be earmarked for Community Chest, Hildreth says. Page 19.

Indigent Care Issue

Washington private hospitals, facing mounting deficits, may make a separate drive for funds to get enough money to pay for hospitalization of the medically indigent, it was learned last night.

An appeal to Congress to liberate the standards for the disbursement of public funds for indigent care also may be made.

These were the two developments in the financial crisis facing local hospitals. It is clear that some hospital officials feel that action on one or both fronts is needed to enable the institutions to balance incomes and costs.

Drive 26 Per Cent Short

How much money will be needed from both sources will depend upon the allotment to hospitals made by the Community Chest. The Chest drive, which fell 26 per cent short of its 4.5-million-dollar goal, included an item of $850,000 as a hospitalization fund. This sum compared with the $400,000 earmarked for this year during the previous drive.

William Rhodes Castle, president of the Washington Area Hospital Council, said yesterday that the hospitals may ask the Community Chest to give their funds early in the year, instead of pro-rating them over a 12-month period as in the past.

If that course is made necessary by a sharp reduction under the $850,000 figure, the hospitals will have to raise the remainder themselves "somehow," Castle said. Separate campaigns for hospitals have been conducted in other cities, it was pointed out. Action here on such a campaign was deferred earlier this year.

The question of an appeal to Congress to loosen the purse string on public aid funds is expected to hinge on a ruling by Corporation Counsel Vernon West on whether the District can legally use tax money to pay part of the cost of hospital care of so-called "semi-indigents"—those who can pay a portion of the cost.

Discussions Under Way

District government officials now believe that West will be forced to rule that tax money can be used only on behalf of "total indigents"—those who have no money for hospital care.

If this ruling stands, the District will have no recourse but to ask for an amendment to the Appropriations Act—assuming that officials desire to move into this situation. Discussions along this line are already under way. Hos-

'Flaming Wheel' From Sky Causes Mystery in Ohio

Bellefontaine, Ohio, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Police today sent the remains of a "flaming wheel" that fell out of the sky to Wright-Patterson Air Base in the hope officials of the Air Force experimental center could tell them what it is.

The flaming object hurtled out of the sky last night and crashed in a residential section. The object lighted up the entire area and gave off great clouds of smoke.

Police Chief A. D. Paden said the remains of the object looked like a tire rim off an airplane or automobile. He said the mysterious "wheel" disintegrated in the hands of a patrolman who sought to salvage the remains. Only a couple of tiny pieces remained intact.

Marriage Law

Nine Pastors Are Accused Of Violation

Summonses for nine clergymen, including President Truman's pastor, were issued Saturday for reported violation of a law requiring reports of marriages performed to be filed within a 10-day period.

Pruden

Assistant Corporation Counsel Clark F. King said there were 140 apparent violations, involving more than 100 clergymen, between last March and September, and that summonses for the other pastors would also be issued in groups.

The name of the Rev. Edward Hughes Pruden, pastor of First Baptist Church, where the President worships, headed the list of those for whom summonses were issued Saturday to appear in the corporation counsel's office Tuesday for a preliminary hearing.

The other eight as listed by the corporation counsel's office were:

The Revs. Andrew R. Bird, 22d and P sts. nw.; E. L. Harrison, 1223 Irving st. ne.; Charles W. Wood, Rock Creek Cemetery grounds; James H. Miers, 2715 13th st. nw.; John J. Charterites' Council Slate Is Assailed

Montgomery Rural Areas, Silver Spring Both Claim Slights

By Phillip Austensen
Post Reporter

Selection of seven council candidates by the Montgomery County Charter Committee drew some strong criticism yesterday from a number of sources.

In general, the most dissatisfaction was voiced in Silver Spring and the upper or rural sections of the county, while Bethesda-Chevy Chase, always strong for the charter, was taking the selections and liking them with only a few exceptions.

Seven persons named Friday as candidates for posts of councilmen by the Montgomery Charter Committee were: P. Garland Ligon, Brinklow; Augustus R. Selby, Germantown; Thomas C. Kelley, Darnestown; Mrs. Dorothy S. Himstead, Chevy Chase; J. Douglas Bradshaw, Takoma Park; Frederic P. Lee, Bethesda; and Dr. Lewis Meriam, Kensington.

Silver Spring residents felt that their community, "second largest in the State and fastest growing in the county," had been slighted through omission of any candidate from that community.

Victor Richter of Woodmoor, president of the Allied Civic Group of Silver Spring and himself a charterite, expressed the following wide-spread sentment:

"Personally, I am very much disappointed that there is no one from Silver Spring, the second largest community in Maryland, nominated for the county council. Takoma Park and Kensington neither is affected much by the charter government since both are incorporated towns, yet both of them have representatives on the council.

"As an individual I have no complaint against the persons selected but I do feel that Silver Spring has been slighted."

Blair Lee 3d, president of the Silver Spring Board of Trade, also expressed regret that no nominee from the Silver Spring area had been named.

A bitter attack upon the slate named by the charter nominating committee was released by John S. Larcombe, jr., of Gaithersburg, secretary-treasurer of the Farmers Club of Upper Montgomery, who said a meeting of the executive committee of his club yesterday

5000 Defy Soviet Zone Puppet Rule

Electrical Workers Threaten to Strike On Eve of Western Sector Elections

Reds Want Light Vote

A HEAVY VOTE in today's Berlin elections would prove discouraging to Reds in their bid for control of the German capital city. Section II, Page 2.

10,000 to Guard Polls

(From Press Dispatches)

Berlin, Dec. 4.—On the eve of Sunday's elections, nearly 5000 Soviet sector electrical workers issued an unprecedented defiance of the new Soviet sector rump government today.

The workers, meeting in the American sector to avoid Communist interference, voted to strike Monday unless police intimidation ceases immediately.

The strike ultimatum came as Berlin transport workers called a four-hour stoppage for Sunday morning to foil Soviet attempts to prevent west Berliners employed in the Soviet sector from voting in the municipal elections.

Ordered to Work

The Russians, who have been waging a campaign of intimidation to keep Berliners away from the election, had ordered factories in their sector to work Sunday so that a considerable number of west Berliners would not have time to cast their ballots. But with transport halted until 10 a. m., there will be time for them to vote before they are able to go to work as the polls will open at 8 a. m.

West Berlin's anti-Communists wound up their election campaigns tonight with American and British assurances that the western Allie will not leave Berlin. The assurances came from Gen. Lucius D. Clay, American military governor and from a foreign office spokesman in London.

10,000 Police to Guard Polls

At least 10,000 police will guard the polls Sunday to prevent any election interference by Communists. Western Allied troops will be alerted. The Russians have refused to permit elections in their zone. Last Tuesday Communists took over the city hall in the Soviet sector and proclaimed a rump government. The Soviet military commander recognized this rump government Thursday. It was this government that the electrical workers defied today.

The defiant workers are employes of Bewag, the biggest electrical corporation in Berlin, which controls virtually all the power used in the Soviet-sector. They threatened to strike at 3 p. m. (9 a. m. E.S.T.) Monday unless the Communist city government:

1. Withdraws all its police guards from Bewag installations in the Soviet sector of Berlin.

2. Releases six Bewag workers who were arrested during the past few days, apparently without cause.

Nearly two million Germans, blockaded 100 miles behind the iron curtain, were urged tonight to vote "for freedom and against Communst" in the election.

What ordinarily would be a

Pilotless Plane Flies 2½ Hours Before Crashing

Pennington, N. J., Dec. 4 (A.P.).—A runaway plane which flew off without a pilot crashed tonight in a cornfield some 45 miles from its takeoff point.

The plane, a 65-horsepower two-seater, roared away from the Pennington Airport this afternoon, climbed slowly and turned south as if under perfect pilot control.

It crashed into the cornfield near Sewell in Gloucester County 2½ hours later, almost exactly the time allotted for exhaustion of its gas supply.

The plane roared away from a ground crew man who spun the propeller without knowing the engine's accelerator had been left wide open.

Found Unconscious on Floor

Skull Blow Kills Merchant; Family Insists It's Murder

Charles Scheer, 48, proprietor of a men's clothing store at 1100 N. Capitol st. died yesterday in George Washington University Hospital from a fractured skull in what his family insisted to police was "a murder."

Scheer was found unconscious on the floor of his store about 10 p. m. last Monday. Police Capt. Robert Murray, assistant chief of the Detective Bureau, said Scheer complained earlier to several customers and to a newsboy that he felt ill. He was taken to the hospital in the belief he had collapsed from some sort of illness.

When he died early yesterday afternoon, there was so much uncertainty as to the cause of death that an autopsy was performed on orders of Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald. The coroner announced the post-mortem revealed death was caused by an extensive fracture of the skull. Brain lacerations also were found.

Dr. MacDonald said he found it hard to believe such a wound could have been caused by a fall. He said he will swear in a coroner's jury Monday morning to examine further into the case.

Meanwhile, Capt. Murray declared his men had been investigating the case since the night Scheer was found in the store. He indicated they had found nothing to substantiate the assertion by members of Scheer's family that Scheer had been murdered,

3200 Lost When Blast Sinks Ship

100 to 700 Chinese Survive Disaster In Yangtze River; Exact Toll Unknown

Cause Undetermined

MME. CHIANG KAI-SHEK to appeal personally to President Truman this week for all-out United States aid in China's war on Communists. Page 5.

Victims Were Refugees

Shanghai, Dec. 4 (A.P.).—More than 3200 Chinese were estimated dead or missing tonight in the explosion of an overcrowded refugee ship in the Yangtze estuary.

Lack of passenger records made possible only the roughest figures. The exact toll never will be known.

Even approximate accuracy, however, ranks the disaster as the greatest in modern maritime history, including single-ship casualties of major wars.

Estimates of those rescued ranged from a low of 100 to a high of 700.

Cause of Blast Unknown

The 2099-ton steamer Kiangya sailed from Shanghai Friday for Ninchsien (Ningpo), 200 miles down the coast. It exploded about 10 p. m. Friday and sank within an hour, all available survivors agreed. Cause of the explosion was not known. Guesses ranged from Communist sabotage to a floating mine or possibly overtaxed boilers.

The loss was not discovered until Saturday morning, when a passing coastal ship sighted the funnel and a bit of wrecked superstructure protruding above the shallow water.

Six Chinese tugs and former landing craft still searched the scene 30 miles northeast of Shanghai tonight.

It was considered unlikely that they would find additional survivors after more than 24 hours in the chill, wind-lashed waters.

Ship Overcrowded

Officials of the China Merchant Steam Navigation Co. said its top capacity was supposed to be 1186 persons. They estimated that actually it had carried as many as 4250, half of whom had boarded without tickets.

No non-Chinese were known to have been aboard.

The steamship office had to close during the day as thousands of relatives of passengers sought admittance. Extra police sought vainly tonight to break up the milling horde that jammed traffic in nearby streets.

One of the survivors said two junks passed nearby just before the explosion. He expressed belief they had cast loose a mine, but this was only speculation.

Survivors said many persons were trapped below decks by the explosion and sudden sinking. The radio was knocked out instantly, so no distress call was sent.

Man Who Won '92 $5-Week-for-Life Contest Dies at 85

Boston, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The Boston Globe tonight disclosed the death of a New Hampshire accountant who collected a total of $14,560 from the newspaper after winning a $5-a-week-for-life contest on the 1892 presidential election.

Lewis M. Woodbridge, of Bath, was 29 when he won the contest. He was 85 when he died November 20.

The Globe said Woodbridge submitted the closest among two million estimates of the New York State presidential vote. He missed Grover Cleveland's total by 16 votes and Benjamin Harrison's by 25.

House Reopens Probe Tuesday With Clews to Spy Agent; N. Y. Grand Jury Is Recalled

Microfilms, Other New Material Said To Point to Guilty; Handwriting Traced

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

The House Un-American Activities Committee will reopen hearings Tuesday into an alleged prewar Red spy ring here, confident that it knows now who acted as Soviet agent within the State Department.

In another phase of the spy investigation, the Justice Department yesterday ordered its special grand jury in New York, which has been investigating Communist espionage for the past 18 months, to resume sessions at 10 a. m. Monday. Presumably it will consider evidence similar to that to be laid before the House committee.

Evidence linking at least one State Department employe with Soviet undercover agents in the late 1930's was found among microfilms of important documents discovered last week, a committee spokesman said yesterday. These microfilms were concealed in a pumpkin on the Maryland farm of Whittaker Chambers, self-described Communist courier in the prewar years. Now a senior editor of Time magazine, Chambers testified before the committee last summer that he renounced communism before the war.

Handwriting Clew

Committee Investigator Robert E. Stripling said yesterday that evidence identifying the State Department employe who removed the documents would be introduced at the new hearings. These hearings were called by Representative Mundt (R., S. Dak.), who radioed Representative Nixon (R., Calif.) asking him to abandon a vacation trip to Panama and return to Washington at once. Nixon was active in pursuing evidence of a Soviet spy ring here from the time the matter was brought to the committee's attention.

Stripling said yesterday that "very important" new evidence had been turned up in addition to that in Chambers' microfilms. He said Chambers would be one of the witnesses at the new hearings and that others would include various technicians, including handwriting experts.

From another source it was learned that handwriting on some of the documents already has been tentatively identified as that of a former State Department employe.

Other Documents Found

In addition to the microfilms, Stripling said, other documents have been discovered which he described as important in the committee's unfinished probe of alleged Red espionage. All these documents, including enlargements of many of the microfilms, have been made available to the Department of Justice and the

Both Armies Claim Gains In China War

Conflicting News Leaves Status of Battle Uncertain

(From Press Dispatches)

Nanking, China, Dec. 4.—Conflicting dispatches from the Hwai River front tonight failed to make it clear whether the main battle of Nanking had actually begun, but the Nationalists were claiming the Communists were falling back under heavy attack.

The Reds, however, declared they had encircled 104,000 Nationalist troops southeast of Suchow. The Communist radio in North Shensi said three Nationalist army groups had failed in an effort to rescue the trapped forces of Gen. Huang Wei and had given up the attempt.

The United Press quoted the National Defense Ministry as saying 10 Communist columns, roughly 100,000 men, were withdrawing northwestward from the rail hub of Pengpu, 100 miles north of Nanking under heavy pressure from reinforced nationalist forces.

Government headquarters asserted 4000 Communists were killed in a futile attack on the outer defenses of Kalgan, 100 miles northwest of Peiping. The announcement said 60,000 Communists made the attack, but were thrown back 10 miles southeast of Kalgan.

The ministry announced that Nationalist forces had "voluntarily" abandoned Suchow.

The Associated Press reported Chinese officials in Nanking were considerably more optimistic.

'Mighty Mo' Won't Retire, Truman Says

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 4 (A.P.).—President Truman stood on the deck of one of America's mightiest warships today and called it "a symbol of might in peace."

He was talking about the 45,000-ton battleship Missouri, named for his State.

He stood just a few feet from the bronze plaque on the deck, which commemorates the Japanese surrender aboard the "Mighty Mo" in Tokyo Bay in 1945.

Mr. Truman arrived here shortly after noon on a weekend cruise from Washington. He came to take part in the presentation of a 281-piece silver service to the battleship.

The $10,000 set of silverware was the gift of the people of the State of Missouri. It was presented by Gov. Phil Donnelly and accepted by the vessel's skipper, Capt. James Thach, jr.

Under unusual circumstances, Mr. Truman took the occasion to make it emphatically clear that the Strong Quake Hits S. California But Damage Not Heavy

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Southern California was rocked today by a stronger but far less damaging earthquake than the one which wrecked Long Beach in 1932.

The quake broke thousands of dollars worth of merchandise in Palm Springs, shattered windows throughout the area from Ventura to San Diego, and caused a Griffith Park zoo elephant to have a miscarriage.

The fact the shock was centered in the Coachella Desert prevented possible loss of life.

More than 100,000 football fans who saw the Southern California-Notre Dame football game had left the coliseum 10 minutes before the quake. Newspapermen still in the press box felt the steel structure sway from side to side.

Five Suspects Surrender in 'Robe' Murder

All Deny Connection With Ambush Killing Of Georgia Negro

Lyons, Ga., Dec. 4 (A.P.)—Five white men surrendered today and were held under suspicion of murder in the ambush slaying of Negro Robert Mallard November 20.

Mallard was slain as he neared his home, 18 miles southeast of Lyons. His widow, Amy James Mallard, said he was killed by five or six robed but unmasked white men.

The break was announced by Capt. Delmar Jones of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation. It came after Superior Court Judge Robert H. Humphrey called the Toombs County grand jury into special session at 10 a. m., Friday.

Captain Jones identified those arrested as: J. Roderick Clifton, 36; William Lamar Howell, 24; James Spivey, 24; Herschel Sikes, 34, and Barney Sikes, 34, all of Lyons.

The five denied any connection with the Negro's death. None apparently was surprised by the investigator's action.

Judge Humphrey had called the grand jury upon receipt of a letter "from Gov. Herman Talmadge this morning enclosing photostatic copies of letters purporting to have been written by Amy Mallard, naming the two men alleged to have killed her husband."

The photostats were those given to the Governor yesterday by a Cleveland, Ohio, businessman, Joseph M. Goldwasser, who undertook a personal crusade to obtain action on the Mallard case. Goldwasser is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Goldwasser had told the Governor that Mallard's widow was afraid to return to Toombs to take out warrants against the men. He said she thought she would be arrested on counter-warrants, put in jail "and then the jail would be broken down and she would be taken out and lynched."

General Trujillo Killed Himself, Brother Reports

Ciudad Trujillo, Dominican Republic, Dec. 4 (A.P.).—The office of President Rafael L. Molina Trujillo said in a communique today the president's brother, Gen. Anibal Trujillo, who died Thursday, had committed suicide.

The official announcement said Gen. Trujillo was suffering from a nervous breakdown, aggravated by the fatal shooting of his adopted son in Bunnell, Fla., two years ago.

The communique said the general's son, Jose Adrian Trujillo, was killed when he "tried to defend a Negro companion at whose side he had fought during the World War in the U. S. Army."

(At the time of the incident, a coroner's jury held that young Trujillo was killed by deputy Miller Teeter in self defense after the youth drew a pistol. The jury found that the shooting resulted when Trujillo and a Jamaican companion were mistaken for Negroes and denied service in a cafe in Bunnell.)

The general's condition became critical three weeks ago, but he refused to be taken to the United States for treatment, which he feared might be "inhumane."

Liaison Termed Satisfactory

ECA Carrying Out Mandate, Watchdog Committee Reports

By Ferdinand Kuhn, jr.
Post Reporter

The Economic Cooperation Administration gets a generally clean bill of health in a study prepared by the staff of the congressional watchdog committee, released for partial publication last night.

The 95-page printed study, submitted to the committee on Friday, will be used as the basis of its first report to Congress early in the new year.

Portions of the study dealing with strategic materials, foreign assets in the United States, and the dismantling of German plants—all controversial subjects—were not made public, on the ground that they involved matters under negotiation with foreign governments.

Judging from the published portions, however, the watchdog staff finds that the intent of Congress has been carried out by the ECA and other agencies involved in the vast and complex European Recovery Program.

For example, when Congress wrote the Economic Cooperation Act last winter there was widespread fear of friction between the ECA and the State Department, at home and abroad. The committee staff now quotes ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman as saying his liaison and cooperation with Secretary Marshall and the heads of most other executive agencies are "operating satisfactorily."

It says the same of relationships between the ECA's special missions and the American embassies or legations in the participating countries abroad.

The only exception noted in the published portions of the study is that "liaison with the military may not be satisfactory" regarding the acquisition of strategic materials. Half a dozen Government agencies involved are represented on a "task committee" dealing with this problem, but, according to the report, "while each agency represents its own interests, no one agency is able to resolve conflicting viewpoints and direct action."

Published portions of the report suggest that the countries getting American aid are carrying out the wishes of Congress in such ways as publicizing American aid, put-

Defend Protestant Churches

Infiltration by Communists Denied by Methodist Bishops

New York, Dec. 4 (A.P.).—The Council of Bishops of the Methodist Church said today, "We expressly deny that Communism has infiltrated our Protestant churches."

The bishops' statement was prepared at the council's meeting in Cincinnati Thursday in answer to a report of the House Committee on Un-American Activities dealing with communism and religion.

The House Committee, in a pamphlet report entitled "One Hundred Things You Should Know About Communism," issued November 22, said Communists are seeking to corrupt religion in the United States by infiltrating into churches and church organizations. The report said that "in all their plans and actions, the Communists mark down religion as enemy No. 1."

The Bishops declared today the "apparent effect" of the House Committee's report "is to create the impression that the churches have been infiltrated by Communists and that responsible leaders of the churches follow the party line."

"We who know the church know these charges to be false," the bishops asserted. "We depore any statement from any source which defames a great Christian communion representing millions of

Nixon Considered Restraining Influence On Often-Spectacular House Committee

In a way Representative Richard M. Nixon (R., Calif.), is himself to blame for having his first vacation in two years cut short even as he was en route to Panama.

It was, after all, the tall, dark, and — yes — handsome freshman Congressman who has been pressing the House Un-American Activities Committee and the Justice Department to search out the truth in the Chambers-Hiss affair.

So that when the bizarre case suddenly pops up again with a Halloween twist in the shape of a pumpkin, what was there to do but call back the 35-year-old wartime Naval officer from his cruise for more Capitol Hill hearings?

It's unlikely, though, that the serious-minded 6-foot attorney will resent the interruption. Those who know him intimately may say that Dick Nixon can't rest until he clears up what's on his mind. And the double question—Is Hiss a Communist as charged by Chambers, or is Chambers lying?—has been bothering Nixon for many months now.

Representative Nixon is generally considered a restraining influence on the often-spectacular operations of the House Un-American Activities Committee. His admirers describe the Californian as a "progressive Republican." His unfriendly critics damn him with faint praise, such as: "The most enlightened member of an unenlightened committee." Neutral observers see in Dick Nixon a bright young man, intensly earnest, serious, and sincere.

In the eyes of labor, the black- and curly-haired, strong-jawed Congressman is listed with an X-mark among those who wrote and voted for the Taft-Hartley Act. In the eyes of civil liberties defenders, the silver-tongued legislator is regarded as misguided for his part in the Mundt-Nixon bill to outlaw the Communists.

But Nixon himself, and his associates, insist that he is not anti-labor, merely pro-public. They insist too that the Mundt-Nixon bill was a piece of moderate legislation that ignored the pressure of extremists.

Critics and friends alike recognize the former small-town lawyer as able, agile on his feet, and with the gift of oratory.

Born in Yorba Linda, he was reared in Whittier in the citrus country of California. He worked his way through Whitier College, earned a law degree at Duke University in 1937. For the next five years he practiced law in Whittier, married Patricia Ryan, a local beauty. He came to Washington in '42 for brief service with the Office of Emergency Management, then entered the Navy. He served four years, chiefly in the South Pacific, came out a lieutenant commander.

While still in uniform, Nixon was selected by a GOP fact-finding committee of his Twelfth Congressional District to be candidate in '46 against the Democratic incumbent, New Dealer Jerry Voorhis, seeking his sixth consecutive term.

REP. RICHARD NIXON

Even the county Republicans expected the unknown Nixon to lose against the nationally headlined Voorhis. The youthful Quaker, however, took his campaign seriously, challenged Voorhis to a series of debates. Five times the opponents met before packed houses in the Lincoln-Douglas tradition. Nixon won the election by 15,000 votes.

In the recent elections, Nixon was sent back to Washington without much of a contest. He'd already won both the Republican and Democratic primaries. Having upset the experts, Dick Nixon then went on to Washington to upset tradition. He defied the custom that freshman members of Congress are expected to be seen but rarely heard. He was unquestionably one of the outstanding first-terners in the Eighth Congress.

Here, the Congressman and his wife, Pat, live at 3538 Gunston rd., Parkfairfax, in nearby Virginia, with their two children, 'Tricia and Julie. In February of '46, Representative Nixon broke his left arm and severely injured the other when he slipped on the ice while carrying 'Tricia in his arms. The child was unhurt.

Nixon is too serious to relax. Some weekends he takes off for his folks' farm at York, Pa. Mostly, though, he works. Often he forgets to eat, so that his staffers make it a point to suggest rolls and coffee for breakfast shortly after he arrives at his desk.

800 Reds Held Building Army In America

By The Associated Press

The House Un-American Activities Committee said yesterday an estimated 800 Moscow-trained American Communists are "high officers of a secret army now being drilled to overthrow our Government."

Where in the United States such a secret army is being drilled, the committee did not say in a pamphlet titled "100 Things You Should Know About Communism and Education."

The pamphlet, in question and answer form, is one of a series prepared by the committee.

It said education is one of the ripest fields for Communist activity, explaining that many Communists and fellow travelers have bored into the American school system and constitute "a deadly danger."

"Run Some Schools"

"Besides active teaching in public schools, private schools, and church schools, from kindergartens to colleges, they run some schools outright," the committee claimed, adding:

"The Communists have always found the teaching group the easiest touch of all the professional classes for actual party zealots and follow travelers."

It gave this as the reason communism attracts so many learned men:

"Sometimes it is frustration. Sometimes it is greed or love of power. Sometimes it is misplaced idealism."

The committee said the highest college of Communist training is the Lenin school in Moscow, where:

"Carefully selected Communists from the United States and other countries get a free course in factory sabotage, bomb-making, kidnaping, train-wrecking, mutiny, civil warfare, espionage, infiltration and other methods of wrecking a country."

Education Aim Described

It estimated that 800 American Communists trained at the Lenin School have returned to the United States to serve as "the high officers of a secret army now being drilled to overthrow our Government."

In a preface to the report, the committee said this is what the Communists plan to do to the American child if they can control the American educational system:

"They mean to take him from the nursery, put him in uniform with the Hammer and Sickle flag in one hand and a gun in the other, and send him out to conquer the world.

"If they have their way he will be guided from the kindergarten straight through to college, so that he will have anything but a mind of his own.

"He will be trained but not educated. He will be taught to solve problems that are handed to him and to consider it a crime to think for himself. He will be the childman of communism."

Need of Laws Claimed

If Communists have their way in this country, the committee said, they would "smash the existing school system," dismiss, jail or shoot teachers who resist, and train pupils to "obey, to love and to hate."

The committee said "we need more law than is at present on the books" in order to halt the spread of communism. But it suggested no specific laws.

"One of the Communist Party's most powerful devices for catching youth," it said, "is that of using 'big name' agents to spark a campus rally or meeting which has as its real purpose the planting of party propaganda."

In some cases, it said, teachers slip propaganda into classroom work and textbooks and lead "gullible students into Red-sponsored campus activities."

Committee Lists Schools

The committee listed these as "typical examples" of Communist schools in the United States:

Jefferson School of Social Science, New York City (with annexes at Brighton Beach, Brownsville, Tremont and Allerton, N. Y.); Philadelphia School of Social Science, Philadelhpia; People's Educational Center, Hollywood, Calif; California Labor School, San Francisco, and annexes in Los Angeles, Oakland and Palo Alto, Calif; Walt Whitman School of Social Science, Newark, N. J.; George Washington Carver School, New York City; Seattle Pacific Northwest Labor School, Seattle, Wash.; Samuel Adams School, Boston; Abraham Lincoln School and three annexes in Chicago; School of Jewish Studies, New York City; Ohio School of Social Science and Art, Cleveland; Tom Paine School, Westchester, N. Y., and Tom Paine School of Social Science, Philadelphia.

Of that group, the committee said, only these now are open: Jefferson School of Social Science, California Labor School, Seattle Pacific Northwest Labor School, and School of Jewish Studies.

The committee said the Henry A. Wallace youth groups are "more tools of the Communist Party."

"Communism gained new recruits through the Wallace campaign," the committee said, and "made new contracts and tapped fresh money. The largest vote ever cast for communism in this country was registered in 1948 behind Wallace's name."

Chambers' Film-Producing Pumpkin Patch

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

FARM YIELDS SECRETS—Microfilms of secret State Department papers were pulled from a hollow pumpkin at a spot on Whittaker Chambers' farm indicated by arrow. The Time Magazine editor led two investigators of the House Un-American Activities Committee to the small pumpkin patch, reached down and picked up a pumpkin and, handing it to one of the men, said, "Is this what you want?" his wife said yesterday. The farm is near Westminster, Md.

United States attorney's office for the District, Stripling added.

The committee investigator emphasized that the committee's objective now is to clear up the investigation which reached a stalemate last summer after creating widespread attention.

"The purpose," he declared, "is to bring to a conclusion the hearings the committee has had in progress several months on the Hiss-Chambers matters and on espionage in the Federal Government."

He referred to Alger Hiss, former State Department official who is now president of the Carnegie Endowment for World Peace. Chambers testified last summer that he knew Hiss as a member of a Communist "apparatus" which functioned here before the war and Hiss testified that Chambers was lying.

Chambers' Lawyer Subpenaed

When Chambers repeated his charges in a radio broadcast, where he was not protected by congressional immunity, Hiss filed suit for damages in Baltimore. The suit has been brought into committee proceedings, Stripling said, by issuance of a subpena on Richard F. Cleveland of Baltimore, Chambers' lawyer, to produce documents and sworn statements taken in its preliminary phases.

In Madison, S. Dak., Representative Mundt told the Associated Press he was informed at least four members of the committee besides himself would be on hand when public hearings open at 2 p. m. Tuesday. Representative Hebert (D., La.), McDowell (D., Pa.) and Rankin (D., Miss.) had informed him they would be present, he said, and added that he understood Nixon had arranged to fly back from Panama.

Rankin hailed the new discoveries with these words:

"It's about time the American people woke up to the fact that they have been sold down the river by their enemies at home and our vodka-drinking diplomats abroad."

Stripling said the microfilms represented documents removed from the State Department before 1938, when Chambers renounced his Communist connection.

"We expect to show conclusively," he continued, "the source of these documents from the State Department to Chambers."

Hidden Short Time

The microfilms, Stripling said, were encased in small metal cans and had been hidden inside the pumpkin only a short time. The Baltimore News-Post yesterday quoted Chambers as saying he had kept them at Brooklyn, N. Y., before secreting them on his farm and that they never had reached Russian hands.

They were turned up as a result of a demand by Hiss' lawyers in the Baltimore suit that Chambers produce documentary evidence of his charges. Chambers then brought forward some 50 documents which now are in the hands of the Justice Department and which are expected to be presented this week to the New York grand jury.

The Un-American Activities Committee, learning of these documents, then called on Chambers to turn over whatever additional evidence he had. The former Communist courier then took committee investigators to his farm and showed them the films hidden in the pumpkin.

Documents Are "Secret"

Stripling said all the microfilms which have been developed so far are of "secret" and "confidential" documents from State, War and Navy Departments files. There was nothing to indicate that all of them went through the State Department, he said, but he was assuming that all came from State files because "they were in consecutive order on the microfilms."

While there was nothing to indicate how or where the documents were photographed, it was presumed they had been removed from the files, microfilmed outside the Department, and returned. It was indicated this procedure would be brought out during the hearings.

The State Department yesterday had no comment on these recent disclosures and officials there said they had not seen the documents.

U. S. May Face Need for Building Own Steel Plants

Spokane, Wash., Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The Federal Government must build steel plants if the steel industry continues its "basic opposition to expansion," Assistant Secretary of Interior C. Giard Davidson said today in a speech prepared for delivery before the Northwest Mining Association.

Davidson assailed the "Eastern steel barons" as "men of little faith" who are "in constant dread of a depression which might leave them with 'too much' steel."

Although they have "at last" agreed to expand their production by three million tons over three years, he said, the current shortage is running to 10 million tons a year.

If the steel men can't raise the capital, he said, then the Reconstruction Finance Corp. should be authorized to lend them money.

Methodists Hit Red Allegation

faithful Christians and loyal Americans.

"As the bishops of the church, we seek to practice Christian charity and to exemplify the grace of patience, but we cannot and will not remain silent when confronted by practices at once un-American and a threat to a free church in a free society."

Their statement said a section of an Episcopal address by the bishops at the general conference of the Methodist Church in Boston last May expressed the attitude of the church on communism.

The Bishops quoted this section as declaring that "we reject communism, its materialism, its method of class war, its use of dictatorship, its fallacious economics and its false theory of social developments but we know that the only way to defeat it permanently is to use the freedom of our democracy to establish economic justice and racial brotherhood."

The Bishops said the House committee's report sought to discredit "by innuendo" the young Men's Christian Association, the young Women's Christian Association and the Epworth League.

Not in Existence for Nine Years

Today's statement by the Bishops quoted the House committee as reporting that the Communists are trying to infiltrate the Epworth League now although the league has not been in existence for nine years.

"As the bishops of the church," their statement said, "We desire to affrm our full confidence in the patriotism and religious devotion of the hundreds of thousands of Methodist youth and to express our deep resentment of any attempt to question their loyalty."

The bishops observed that wide publicity was given the House group's report, and they added:

"We call upon the American press, whose freedom is also likely to be jeopardized by the methods of this Commitee on Un-American Activities, and also upon the American radio, which has such a stake in freedom, to correct the American people by stories and comments upon this report."

The bishops' statement was released at the offices of the council here by Bishop James C. Baker of Los Angeles, council president.

U.N. Unit Approves New Palestine Plan

By John G. Rogers

Paris, Dec. 4 (NYHT).—The political committee of the United Nations General Assembly gave final approval today to a watered-down version of the British-American Palestine formula but the vote was by such a slim margin that doubts arose as to whether it can muster the necessary two-thirds majority in the full Assembly.

The final vote on the entire formula was 25 to 21, with 9 abstentions and 3 absent. The British and the Americans disappointed by this tally, immediately set about trying to promote a sufficient change in votes to guarantee its approval before the Assembly next week.

As finally adopted, the Palestine resolution creates a three-country conciliation commission whose members are to be selected by the big five. It asks this commission to start immediately to try to assist Jews and Arabs to negotiate a permanent end of their war. It makes no territorial recommendations except to propose eventual internationalization of Jerusalem.

There is no assurance this commission would have any success in its work. But if the British and the Americans are unable to swing enough votes to get their proposal through the Assembly, then the Palestine situation will continue to worry along as at present, with the Security Council and the U. N. acting mediator striving unsuccessfully to promote a formal end to the Holy Land war.

Russia Asked To Limit Use Of Veto Right

Paris, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The special political committee of the United Nations today asked Russia to limit its use of the veto in the Security Council, but rejected any arbitrary curb through revision of the U. N. Charter.

The action came as the General Assembly steering committee opened a drive to adjourn the U. N. session here next weekend. The United States teamed with Russia to defeat a British proposal to prolong the Assembly until it could complete its agenda, probably sometime in January.

The 58-nation political committee adopted a western resolution urging a voluntary curb in the big power use of the veto by a vote of 33 to 6. Only the Soviet bloc voted against it. Australia, India, Egypt and Saudi Arabia abstained.

The steering committe defeated Britain's proposal to keep the General Assembly in session until it completes its agenda by the narrow vote of 7 to 5. It approved an American proposal to adjourn at least by the early morning hours of Sunday, December 12, by a vote of 8 to 4.

The committee's action still must be approved by the General Assembly.

Britain told the committee that it may propose revision of the agenda to put disposition of the former Italian colonies ahead of the next item—Korea.

Britain is anxious to get Assembly approval of the proposed British trusteeship over Cyrenaica in North Africa. The Italian colonies at present are last on the agenda.

Guard Conference to Open

Italian Leftists Lose in Vote On Arms Pacts

Rome, Italy, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The government of Premier Alcide de Gasperi today won its third victory over leftists in Parliament since the cabinet was organized in May.

Government supporters easily defeated a Communist and pro-Communist demand for a vote of nonconfidence. The leftists demanded guarantees against "any act or manifestation which could be interpreted as adherence by Italy to alliances or blocs which have, directly or indirectly, military significance and content."

In winding up the foreign policy debate, de Gasperi said he did not believe war is imminent, and that, if war comes, "it can come only through the foreign policy followed by Communist parties in Europe."

2 Killed in Quake

Mazatlan, Mexico, Dec. 4 (AP).—Two men were killed and many were hurt by earth tremors on the prison island, Maria Madre, 30 miles offshore. The main shock was at 5:24 p. m. yesterday but frequent slight shocks were felt during the night and early today. Nearly every building on the island was badly damaged.

5000 Defy Soviet Rump Rule

local contest between rival political parties has been magnified by the East-West struggle into a giant straw in the wind indicating which conqueror the Germans prefer.

The result will be judged on the relative size of the vote and the stay-at-at-home element.

If more than 80 per cent of the eligible voters come out, the western powers will hail it as a vindication of their fight to stay and prevent the Sovietization of Berlin.

If voting is relatively light, the Communists will claim German indorsement of their efforts to drive out the Western powers.

Clear weather favored a heavy vote, and also the airlift which flew in 5754 tons of food and fuel today.

"Anyone who stays at home tomorrow is giving a vote for communism against freedom," declared Ferdinand Friedensburg, deputy mayor of the legally elected government which rules two thirds of the divided city.

The three parties on the ballot, Social Democrats, Christian Democrats (Conservatives) and Liberal Democrats (rightists) buried their differences in a three-party rally aganst communism at the Titania Palast Theater tonight. Communist rowdies who tried to break up a series of rallies this week did not put in an appearance.

"The Communists will never smash our will, even if they resort to the use of those cannon which ring our city," said Liberal Democrat Carl Schwennicke.

"The Soviets are pressing us with all means short of war," cried Ernst Reuter, Social Democrat favorite for mayor. "They want to press us to our knees but they will never achieve it."

The speakers raged at the Soviet blockade which has left the population dependent on the western airlift for every bite of food.

The election is being held under the Berlin constitution approved by the four occupying powers in 1946. Nevertheless, the Communists refused to risk another outright defeat and banned it as illegal in east Berlin.

Under the city constitution the voting is secret. The voter receives two ballots, one city-wide, the other for his borough, marks them in a booth and places them in a sealed envelop which is dropped in the box. He may give his registration number instead of his name when voting.

All Germans over 20 who have lived here six months are privileged to vote. There are about 1,700,000 of them in the three western sectors.

In the 1946 elections when the Communists received less than 20 per cent of the votes, 92 per cent of the eligible voters cast ballots. This time the Communists are expected to say away.

The Social Democrats won about 48 per cent of the vote in 1946, the Christian Democrats 22 per cent and the Liberal Democrats 9½ per cent.

5-Month Airlift Cost Placed at $73,029,700

San Bernardino, Calif., Dec 4 (AP).—The Berlin airlift cost the Air Force $73,029,700 for a little over five months of operation, Eugene M. Zuckert, Assistant Secretary for Air, said tonight.

The figures appeared to represent the over-all cost to the Air Force, but not the grand total, including Army outlay for supporting service and for the supplies themselves.

The cost estimated covered the period between June 26 and November 30, during which 421,460 tons were delivered to Berlin.

Soviet Rejects 'Good Offices'

Paris, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Russia rejected today the suggestion that a United Nations "good offices commission" try to settle the East-West dispute in Berlin.

The Soviets agreed, however, to supply any neutral committee studying the Berlin currency problem with "necessary information," but they were not enthusiastic.

Russia's official position was outlined in a Tass statement broadcast by the Moscow radio.

One western power spokesman said the statement left the Berlin situation just about where it was.

The Soviet position, as outlined today by Tass, was:

1. Coolness toward the currency study, but willingness to supply the proposed committee with necessary information."

2. Complete rejection of the "good offices commission." Tass said such a commission "could hardly lead to any progress."

3. A repetition of Deputy Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky's statement that the U. N. has no jurisdiction over the Berlin dispute and that the problem must be settled by the Big Four powers alone.

Prince Holds First Court

London, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The baby who may one day rule Britain held his first royal court today in the nursery of Buckingham Palace, with three nurses hovering close to his crib.

Members of the palace staff filed through the lofty cream-colored nursery near Princess Elizabeth's bedroom for a peep at her blue-eyed, golden-haired son who will be three weeks old Sunday.

Almost all palace officials and the servants have now seen the prince, much to the envy of the public, which has not even seen a photograph of the baby.

The baby now weighs 7 pounds, 10 ounces, 4 ounces more than when he was born. His Scottish nursemaid, Margaret Anderson, describes him as "the perfect little prince."

Hopes Grow For Balkan Peace Plan

Paris, Dec. 4 (AP).—Bulgaria and Albania have been asked by Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, president of the United Nations Assembly, to accept a new Balkan mediation plan, it was learned today.

The plan was accepted in principle by Greece and Yugoslavia earlier this week. It was worked out in three weeks of direct talks between Greece and the three Soviet satellites on her northern border.

Yugoslavia was understood to have expressed agreement with major points in the plan but withheld formal acceptance pending agreement by Albania and Bulgaria.

Evatt, who has been acting as mediator in the Balkan talks, submitted the new plan to Bulgarian and Albanan representatives here and asked for formal replies. The replies are now awaited from Sofia and Tirana.

The proposal is said to include a "schedule" of settlement for future border incidents. It also provides for possible creation of a four-nation conciliation commission, it was learned.

A high Greek official at the U. N., who is close to the negotiations, cautioned against overoptimism regarding a lasting peace in the Balkans. He told a reporter:

"If you get word that a four-power agreement has been signed, don't interpret it as an immediate indication that all problems are automatically solved. Much will depend on the good faith of our three northern neighbors."

The tentative Greek-Yugoslav agreement, however, was considered highly significant in informed U. N. quarters. Observers said it might indicate a shift of policy by Marshal Tito's Communist government to a more friendly attitude toward the American-supported Greek government.

The Greek official said Yugoslavia had declined to accept the border plan by herself because Tito is afraid of being further isolated politically from his Cominform neighbors.

"That's why they are insisting on a similar acceptance by Bulgaria and Albania," the Greek informant said.

Cairo, Egypt, Dec. 4 (AP).—Rioting students shouting Palestine and antigovernment slogans killed Police Chief Selim Zaki Pasha with a grenade today.

Police sources said three other policemen were killed and 18 wounded, in the battle at Fuad I University Medical School. Two hundred fifty-nine students, most of them injured, were arrested.

The disorder occurred as Dr. Ralph Bunche, acting U. N. mediator in Palestine, was paying a visit to Cairo. He and his assistants were guarded by a squad of 12 constables and eight plain-clothesmen.

Premier Mahmoud Fahmy Nohrashi Pashs Pasha, who was conferring with Bunche at the time, told reporters "these are elements of destruction. We are going to use all authority in our hands."

Syrian Government Falls

The incident also coincided with news of the fall of Premier Jamil Mardam Bey's government in Syria after several days of strikes and street rioting. Dissatisfaction with the situation in Palestine led to the disturbances.

From another Arab country, Iraq, dispatches reported the National Democratic and Liberal Parties suspended activity because of government restrictions. Only the Independence Party is functioning in Iraq now.

(Middle East dispatches in recent days have reported the likelihood of disturbances, not only in Syria but Iraq and Egypt as well, as a result of popular disillusionment over Palestine events.)

Shouting "the Sudan for Egypt," "Palestine for the Arabs" and "Down with Nokrashy," the students tried to march on Premier Mahmoud Fahmy Nokrashy's office. They kidnaped Dr. Ibrahim Shawki Bey, director of the university, and made him march with them.

Several secondary schools in the area joined in the demonstration. Police said three police guards were killed by grenades at other schools of the university in Giza suburb.

Tonight, however, Saber Tantawi Bey, chief of public security, declared all was quiet.

The reports from Damascus said strikes and riots had ended in Syria but the army continued to rule under martial law. Hasem Attassi, venerable former president, has consented to form a new government after having at first refused.

'Last Warning' Given Czech Church by Foes

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Czechoslovak Resistance Movement told Roman Catholic church leaders today that this week's press and radio attacks on the church were the "last warning."

The movement's official newspaper said editorially that religious freedom existed in Czechoslovakia, "but no church must become a shelter for those who defend the old order and Mammon."

The resistance group is composed of those who fought underground against the German occupiers, who returned to Czech soil in legions formed in Russia and on the western front, or who were in Nazi concentration camps.

Czechs Asking Delivery Of Machinery U. S. Holds

Communist-dominated Czechoslovakia has asked the United States to permit delivery of about 17 million dollars worth of machinery and materials bought in this country.

Czech Ambassador Vladimir Outrata, who carried the plea to Undersecretary of State Lovett Friday night, said the "greater part" of the equipment already is paid for in dollars, but American authorities have refused to grant export licenses.

The United States is screening exports to Russia and Russian-controlled countries, to prevent any increase in their war potential.

The Czech purchases include parts and equipment for a steel strip mill which Outrata said involves "more than 10 million dollars," and 1000 tons of lubricating oil, which the Ambassador said is needed for civilian airlines.

Minister Quits, Refuses To Return to Hungary

Budapest, Hungary, Dec. 4 (AP).—Finance Minister Miklos Nyaraddy, who went to Austria and Germany in November to negotiate the return of Hungarian goods, has resigned and will remain abroad, an official announcement said today.

The statement said his "flight is a warning for the government to be more cautious in appointing delegates for talks abroad."

Mme. Chiang to See Truman This Week

By The Associated Press

Mme. Chiang Kai-shek will appeal personally to President Truman early this week for all-out United States help in China's struggle against Communists.

Authoritative sources said yesterday that a White House hearing for the Chinese Generalissimo's wife would be arranged "within the next few days."

At her meeting with Mr. Truman, China's First Lady will try to overcome Administration reluctance to pour any money into her homeland's civil war.

Earlier last week the President said he would receive Mme. Chiang. But he declined to give any hint as to when the meeting would be or whether he would be able to give her any encouragement.

Informants doubted that Mme. Chiang thus far has made any specific requests. She has talked informally with Secretary of State George C. Marshall but it was believed only to review China's military and economic plight.

On the basis of previous Chinese official statements, however, these informants believe Mme. Chiang later will ask:

1. A three-year American aid program of one billion dollars a year. First-year aid would be mostly military. By the third year it would be chiefly economic.

2. Assignment of a large American military mission to direct Nationalist resistance to the Communist armies.

3. A flat statement of American solidarity with China in its fight aaginst communism in the Far East.

While they are unwilling to send Mme. Chiang away completely empty-handed, American officials thus far have indicated coolness toward the Nationalist government headed by Chiang.

Mme. Chiang conferred informally with Marshall at Walter Reed Hospital Thursday and Friday. She said she was "encouraged," but declined to elaborate.

She had no appointments yesterday. Aides said she was resting at Marshall's Leesburg, Va., home.

Corregidor Nurse Wins Movie Suit

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

MRS. BEULAH G. WALCHER of Denver was awarded $290,000 damages in her suit against Loew's, Inc., yesterday by a Federal Court judge and jury in St. Louis after they attended a private showing of the film, "They Were Expendable." Mrs. Walcher, the former Army nurse who served on Corregidor, contended the movie heroine, Sandy, depicted her as carrying on a romance with Navy Lieut. Robert B. Kelly when such was not the case. She charged the film company, without her consent, used her as a prototype of Sandy and that the film was a "humiliating invasion of privacy" and "cheapened her character."

China Battle Word Awaited

These sources said the main battle had not yet been joined, but expected that it would temporarily stabilize the situation by deciding whether the Nationalists would hold or flee Nanking.

Miles W. Vaughn, United Press vice president for Asia, reported that military observers in Shanghai believe Nanking will be in Communist hands by the end of this month.

Vaughn said there is increasing talk in informed American quarters that some Kuomintang factions may abandon Generalissimo Chiang and work out a deal with the Communists that would permit Red armies to enter the capital without a fight.

One possibility mentioned is the formation of a "democratic coalition," representing the Communists and most other classes of Chinese society except right-wing members of the ruling Kuomintang, including the "big four" families of the Soongs, the Kungs, the Chiangs and the Chens.

The Associated Press declared that arrival of 35,000 reinforcements in Nanking from Hankow eased the recent gloom of Chinese officials. This brought to some 75,000 the number of effectives holding the Yangtze River defenses before the capital.

Red Gen. Chen Yi was reported moving an estimated 125,000 troops into position to block the southward march of three government army groups that evacuated Suchow Wednesday.

Three Communist columns, of about 50,000 men, already were reported engaging the government groups 30 miles south of Suchow.

The former Suchow garrison, with some 100,000 effective combat troops among its 250,000 men, was reported attacking towards the south. The Sixteenth Army group was on the west flank, the Second Army group on the east, with the Thirteenth Army group holding the rear guard.

Government hopes for a smashing victory, however, rested mainly on whether the Twelfth Army group could break out of an eight-day-old Communist encirclement 130 miles northwest of Nanking.

Hovey Slated For Air Post In Argentina

After three years of heading the headquarters command, United States Air Force, at Bolling Field, Brig. Gen. B. M. Hovey will leave December 15 to become air attache at the United States Embassy at Buenos Aires, Argentina.

Gen. Hovey

General and Mrs. Hovey and their daughter Sandra, 9, will visit relatives in Texas before leaving for Argentina in January, the Air Force announced yesterday.

The 43-year-old, one time deputy commander of the Twenty-ninth Tactical Air Command in England supporting General Patton's Third Army drive in Europe, began as an Army private in 1923. He was the first American pilot to land an aircraft at a Berlin air base during the Allied struggle for that city.

As Bolling commandant, he established one of the Air Force's outstanding administrative, safety, maintenance and flying proficiency records. He headed the Berlin Air Command in 1945. Rated as a command pilot, combat observer and aircraft observer, he holds the Legion of Merit with Oak Leaf cluster, Bronze Star, ETO ribbon with six battle stars and decorations from France, Belgium and Luxembourg.

Buenos Aires, Dec. 4 (AP).—President Juan D. Peron's political strength after two and a half years in office will be tested directly Sunday in a national constitutional election.

Voters in Argentina's 14 provinces and the federal capital—the city of Buenos Aires—will elect delegates to an assembly for the purpose of amending the constitution.

Peron and his Peronista party favor changing the bill of rights.

With two major opposition parties abstaining because of what they claim is a lack of liberty in the preelectoral campaign, Peron's followers are expected to capture a majority of the total 158 at stake.

The assembly will be convened next March.

The Peronistas already have announced that if they control the assembly, as expected, one of their first acts will be to amend the constitution to permit the president to succeed himself. The present constitution would require Peron to wait six years after his term expires in 1952 before seeking reelection.

Peron won the presidency in 1946 with 55 per cent of the votes and his congressional nominees triumphed early in 1948 with 60.5 per cent.

Snowy Weather Hits Central Part of U. S

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Snow and high winds gave residents of a large area of the country's midsection a taste of winter Saturday.

The storm brought snow from North Dakota and Montana southwestward through most of Wyoming and northern Utah. Snow and colder weather were moving east toward Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Considerably cooler weather spread westward from the southern Rockies to the Pacific Coast.

Generally fair weather prevailed eastward from the snow belt.

Petrillo Outdone By Street Player Of Salvation Army

Cincinnati, Ohio, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—James Caesar Petrillo, president of the American Federation of Musicians (AFL), finally ran across some musicians he couldn't unionize today.

Petrillo said he was walking through downtown Cincinnati when he met a group of Salvation Army musicians playing on a street corner.

"They sounded good," he said, "so I dropped a five-spot in the box.

"Then I said to the fellow blowing the horn, 'Do you guys belong to the union?'

"'Yes, sir,' was the reply, 'we belong to the union for God.'"

"It stopped me," Petrillo admitted.

British Envoy Visits Iowa State College

Des Moines, Dec. 4 (AP).—Sir Oliver Franks, British Ambassador to the United States, today inspected laboratories and agricultural research projects at nearby Iowa State College in Ames.

The Ambassador and Lady Franks were luncheon guests of Iowa State College President Charles Friley and members of the faculty. They concluded a three-day Iowa visit tonight as dinner guests here of the greater Des Moines committee.

Resting Comfortably

Representative Alfred L. Bulwinkle (D., N. C.), was reported last night to be resting "very comfortably" at the Naval Medical Center at Bethesda, Md., where he is being treated for a serious spinal ailment. He entered the hospital three days ago.

ting their internal finances in order and making the proper use of the so-called counterpart funds of local currencies, which have to be set aside in amounts equivalent to the amount of grants from the United States.

The report complains that Latin-American countries have done "much less than expected" in financing relief and recovery in Western Europe.

It also expresses doubt about the work of the OEEC (Organization for European Economic Cooperation), the cooperative agency set up in Paris by the European countries taking part in the recovery program.

"To what extent the OEEC organization and accomplishments so far represent a real unification of western Europe is difficult to determine," the committee's staff declares.

"Mr. Hoffman has emphasized the significance of the fact that representatives of the participating countries have worked together over a period of months debating controversial issues and reached solutions which it was possible for them to agree upon in most instances.

Difficulties Cited

"On the other hand, it should be pointed out that the United Kingdom is charged unofficially by representatives of other participating countries with not going 'all out' to bring about European unification, because of her uncertainty as to whether she would be better off to base her future on her leadership of the British Empire or whether she should throw in her lot with western Europe.

"Furthermore, the political uncertainties within France have made it impossible for that country to play the role in the OEEC which her size and location would indicate she should.

"As a consequence of these doubts, it apparently remains to be determined whether the OEEC is to fill the role of the organization established by the nations of western Europe to further economic unification at whatever sacrifice to their own national prestige may be necessary, or whether, on the other hand, the OEEC exists merely because it is necessary to have such an organization if the countries of Europe are to receive the aid made available under the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948."

Top Salaries Listed

The report discloses for the first time that 13 ECA officials here are getting $15,000 a year, under the provision of the act permitting employment of 25 at more than $10,000 but not more than $15,000. Apart from Special Ambassador W. Averell Harriman, who gets $35,000, Administrator Hoffman, who gets $20,000 and Deputy Administrator Howard Bruce, who gets $17,500—all as provided by law—the 13 who get $15,000 are:

Samuel W. Anderson, director of the industry division; Richard M. Bissell, jr., assistant deputy administrator; Dennis A. FitzGerald, director of food and agriculture; Clinton S. Golden, labor adviser; Aubrey H. Harwood, director of operation; Alex I. Henderson, general counsel; Bryan Houston, director of the office of information; and Bert M. Jewell, labor adviser.

Also, Evan Just, director of the strategic materials division; Eric L. Kohler, controller; Arthur Smithies, director of the fiscal and trade policies division; Wayne C. Taylor, assistant to the administrator, and C. Tyler Wood, special assistant to the administrator.

Personnel Figures

The report says that on October 31 the ECA had 658 employes, 109 consultants, including 67 at $50 a day; and 24 officials on detail from other agencies. In its headquarters and its special mission abroad, there were 726 American employes, 18 consultants, 7 on detail from other agencies, and 721 alien employes.

On November 3, the report says, 1137 employes had been certified for loyalty after FBI investigation, but 782 others had not yet had their investigations completed by the FBI. About 30 who had applied for jobs withdrew their applications because they admitted membership in organizations declared subversive by the Attorney General.

"Actually, 11 individuals who had been employed by ECA after preliminary clearance were denied certification as to their loyalty after complete investigation by the FBI," the report says. "All of these individuals were permitted to resign from ECA."

Army to Induct 13 Here This Week

Thirteen District draft registrants will be inducted into the Army Wednesday, bringing to 24 the number drafted so far this month, Frank D. Norton, deputy District Selective Service head, said yesterday.

To round out the December call for 76 men, larger groups will be inducted on the 15th and 20th according to Norton. No men will be drafted from December 21 through the year's end, he said.

The Navy, meanwhile, said yesterday it is accepting applications from 18-year-old youths for voluntary one-year enlistments.

Lieut. Comdr. J. S. Leidel, commanding officer of the District recruiting station, 1400 Pennsylvania ave. nw., said the backlog of applicants had been exhausted and that 18-year-olds would meet with no delay in getting their applications through.

The following men are scheduled for induction Wednesday:

Louis Benjamin, 24, 5000 14th st. nw., houseman; Roy W. Koenig, 24, 7212 7th st. nw., television technician; Richard T. Wilson, 24, 1452 Rock Creek Ford rd. nw., truckdriver; Gordon B. Bognovitz, 24, 831 Delafield pl. nw., parking lot manager.

Maurice D. Leach, 25, 3811 Van Ness st. nw., librarian; McFall Kerbey, jr., 25, 4424 Volta pl. nw., underwriter trainee; Richard H. Lee, 24, 3620 Jenifer st. nw., machinist; and Philip G. Cox, 23, 3622 Military rd. nw., dancing instructor.

'Mighty Mo' Won't Retire

Missouri is not going to be taken out of active service.

After the presentation, the President walked to newsmen "covering" the event and told them:

"I want to make a statement.

"Some smart Aleck who poses as a spokesman for the Navy said the Missouri is going to be taken out of commission. The Missouri will not be taken out of commission.

"I want to make that as strong as I can make it, and I am speaking as the President of the United States."

To underscore his words, Mr. Truman told reporters they could put his remarks in quotation marks, something they are not always permitted to do.

The Chief Executive's statement was prompted by a story in The Washington Post Friday that the "Mighty Mo" was headed for the mothball fleet because there no longer was a place for battleships in modern sea warfare.

Mr. Truman came here aboard the yacht, Williamsburg, after an overnight cruise from Washington. He and his party started back at 2:50 p. m. The yacht is due in Washington Sunday morning.

In brief remarks at the close of the presentation, Mr. Truman called this a "great day for me."

He recalled that he was present when his daughter, Margaret, who stood near by, "Broke the bottle of champagne" at the launching of the Missouri.

He recalled, too, that as President he took part in the decision to have the Japanese formally surrender aboard the Missouri.

The Missouri, Mr. Truman said, "is not a symbol of might in war, but a symbol of might in peace."

A nosebleed forced Mrs. Truman to leave the surrender deck during the ceremony and retire to a cabin. She was the first of the President's party to leave the Missouri after the luncheon that followed the ceremony, returning the 100 yards to the Williamsburg in an automobile. Presidential Secretary Charles G. Ross said just before the Williamsburg sailed for Washington that Mrs. Truman had recovered.

As the President was leaving, a woman in a fur coat broke away from a group of civilians standing in a roped-off area on the pier and ran toward the Chief Executive. Two secret service men grabbed her and escorted her back up the pier, despite her protest that she "only wanted to say hello to the President."

Bricker Fears U. S. Headed for Dictatorship

Detroit, Dec. 4 (AP).—A commission to find out whether the United States is rushing toward dictatorship was suggested today by Senator Bricker (R., Ohio).

Speaking at the final session of the General Assembly of the States, Bricker expressed concern that the Federal system was being abandoned and with it individual freedoms.

Bricker's suggestion was made during a panel discussion of the Federal system. Bricker declared:

"Maybe State governments are an expensive, archaic, manifestation of a bygone day and should be dissolved. Heaven forbid such a recommendation—but if they are let's find it out and stop paying lip service to the Federal system."

Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., of Maryland, said "a tide, welling up from the people, demanding better living conditions, has swept away forever many of the narrow limitations of government conceived by the founding fathers."

VFW to Ask Broad U. S. Security Plan

She's a Rare Senator, Indeed

MRS. VERA BUSHFIELD, looking over the files in her office yesterday, is one Senator who is happy about not making a single political speech. Mrs. Bushfield (R., S. Dak.) appointed in October to serve out the remaining months of the term her late husband, Harland J. Bushfield, never expects to actually sit in a Senate session or make a speech. She admits she is more interested in her six grandchildren than in political oratory

Major strengthening of the national security received top priority in the Veterans of Foreign Wars 1949 legislative program yesterday at a conference here of the VFW's national legislative committee.

The Nation's second largest veteran's organization will press for legislation provding for a comprehensive preparedness program that will include creation and training of a Civilian Security Organization, plans for immediate mobilization of men and industry for war work, universal military training and retrieval of American air supremacy.

J. R. Klawans, of San Francisco chairman of the legislative committee, which concludes its three-day meeting today, said that all other veterans' problems were secondary to the national security.

Concerning housing, to which the VFW will give second priority in the coming year, the national legislative director, Omar B. Ketchum, will urge extension of rent control one year after March 31, 1949, establishment by the VA of an inspection system for new veterans' housing upon which guarantees for mortgage loans will be issued, and the sale by the Government of its permanent war housing to veterans.

On the subject of employment, the VFW will seek to enact legislation creating a Veterans Employment and National Development Corporation with broad lending power to self-liquidating projects agreeing to employ veterans, and to veterans themselves, and to amend the Social Security Act to include military and naval personnel.

The VFW legislative committee also voted to press for a cost-of-living increase in compensation to widows and orphans, and veterans' compensation and pensions.

It was voted that a bonus of $4 a day of overseas service and $3 a day of home service, less any benefits already received under the GI Bill of Rights, be sought from the Eighty-first Congress. This bonus was No. 8 in a list of eight high priority items by the VFW committee.

In separate resolutions, the legislative group voted to indorse the Mundt-Nixon Bill and any proposals to keep the United States in Berlin.

Members of the VFW committee include Edward K. Inman of Washington and Edward L. Foster of Silver Spring, Md.

Champion Turkey Sold To Armour for $732

Modesto, Calif., Dec. 4 (AP).—A turkey sold for $30.50 a pound here. It wasn't an ordinary bird. Armour & Co. paid $732 yesterday for the grand champion of the Far West Turkey Show—a 24-pound hen grown by Elwood Swanson of Turlock, Calif.

Kraft Foods paid $440.75 for the reserve champion — a 41-pound tom also grown by Swanson. The seven top dressed birds brought a total of $1895.88.

The heaviest bird wasn't sold. The 45½-pound tom was presented to Gov. Earl Warren

Thieves Quickly Caught

Camberley, England, Dec. 4 (AP).—Two Londoners were jailed here today on a charge of stealing 1000 of the King's Christmas trees. Police intercepted the pair while they were London bound in a truck loaded with trees from a crown forest at Deepcut.

Virginia Agency May Be Model for Alcoholism Study

A prediction that other States will follow Virginia in its new study of alcoholism came yesterday from a United States Public Health Service Official.

Dr. Robert H. Felix, chief of the mental hygiene division, said Virginia's new health agency "might well develop plans applicable to other States."

The entire country, he added, will be watching the work of the State health department's bureau of alchol studies and rehabilitation.

The bureau launched its "pilot" research last month. A State health official said it is "feeling its way" in the search for apractical program of alcoholism treatment.

D. C. Legion to Name Veteran Claims Expert

A special convention of the District Department of the American Legion yesterday ordered the appointment of a full-time claims specialist to assist District veterans, and the naming of a six-man board of managers for the American Legion clubhouse.

The delegates, meeting in the Department of Commerce auditorium for final sessions of a two-day special session ordered by the regular convention last summer, also made several changes in the articles of their constitution in an effort to "streamline" that document.

In yesterday's actions, the delegates asked that a claims specialist be placed in the Washington Veterans Regional Office to assist in matters of rehabilitation of District veterans. The department's executive committee was ordered to make this appointment at the earliest practicable date, at an expense figure to be worked out by the committee. An original proposal recommending a $7000-per-year service officer was defeated.

The delegates further directed Department Commander David E. Kisliuk to appoint a six-man board of managers of the American Legion clubhouse, 2437 15th st. nw., subject to the ratification of the executive committee. The clubhouse is now managed by one man, Edward G. Comingore.

In addition to making changes in several articles of the constitution, the delegates asked that a list of proposed changes in the by-laws and amendments be referred to the executive committee for study and presentation at a January meeting.

Airliner Drops Engine

Columbus, N. Mex., Dec. 4 (U.P.)—An American Airlines DC-6 with 45 persons aboard made an emergency landing here last night after dropping a burning engine while on a flight from El Paso to Los Angeles, airline officials said today. The 41 passengers and four crew members were not injured.

65 Escape Navy Blaze

Boston, Dec. 4 (U.P.)—Sixty-five naval officers escaped over ladders or fled unassisted down stairways today when fire swept lounge and clubrooms on the second floor of a naval receiving station building, with a loss of $100,000. No one was injured during the 1½-hour battle to curb the fire, which followed a dance and may have been caused by a cigarette.

Labor Chief Challenges Gov. Tuck

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—J. S. Smith, president of the Virginia Federation of Labor, today asked Governor Tuck to "respond to the mandate of the people" and "help . . . lift the yoke which has been placed around the neck of the laboring people."

Smith's letter was prompted by Governor Tuck's comments recently regarding labor-management relations in Virginia, and Virginia's labor laws. Smith wrote the Governor:

"You state: (1) You do not consider any of these (Virginia's) laws antiunion or antilabor, and (2) that many labor people were pleased with the State's statutes and had appeared willing to have their causes come under the provisions of the utilities labor act.

"With reference to No. 1 . . . certainly a law which deprives an individual or a group of individuals of the freedoms guaranteed in the Constitution of the United States, is not a just law, is not a reasonable law, and is not an honest law.

"With reference to statement No. 2, I challenge you to name the laboring people whom you have referred to as being pleased with the State statutes.

"Your time as an official of the Commonwealth of Virginia is drawing to a close. Before you retire from public life, why not get on the band wagon, respond to the mandate of the people of the United States."

Providence, R. I., Dec. 4 (AP).—The president of the CIO Textile Workers Union charged today that three charitable trusts set up by Textron, Inc. have cost American taxpayers four million dollars.

Emil Rieve, the union head, attacked the trust in an address before the Rhode Island CIO council.

"So-called charitable trusts" were described by Rieve as one problem facing the textile industry which you, right here in this State, can help to remedy."

Charitable trusts associated with Textron have been under investigation for more than two months by a Senate subcommittee headed by Senator Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.). Tobey charged the trusts were "schemes to avoid taxes."

Charitable trusts are exempt from Federal income taxes. Democratic National Chairman J. Howard McGrath, $15,000-a-year trustee of one of the Textron-connected funds, testified before the Senate committee that his trust was tax exempt under a tax code provision which his trustees "pointed out" to the Internal Revenue Department.

Admits Using Trust Funds

Textron President Royal Little contended the trusts are legally operated and charitable in purpose but that he did use them to obtain "risk capital" because it was difficult to obtain elsewhere.

The Senate investigation started after charges by Rieve, including one that Little used the charity trusts for "financial manipulation."

Discussing the trusts set up by Textron, a large textile concern, Rieve said:

"Here is what taxes would have done to the three big Textron trusts, according to their own trustees:

"Rhode Island Charities trust would have paid three million dollars to the Government.

"M. I. T. (Massachusetts Institute of Technology) trust would have paid $667,000.

"Rayon Foundation trust would have paid $525,000.

"But actually they paid nothing at all."

Taxpayers Absorbed Difference

"American taxpayers—including industries which did not use this device of 'charitable foundations'—have had to pay more than four million dollars extra toward the costs of war and the costs of Government."

"This four million dollars covers only the three biggest Textron trusts. And Textron is only one of many companies which have used this device."

Rieve said two of the three Textron trusts have made only relatively small contributions to the charities they were set up to aid. The other, he said, has made none at all.

Union Leader Denies Part In Raid Plan

Kalamazoo, Mich., Dec. 4 (AP).—The president of the Kalamazoo Local of the CIO United Steelworkers today told a congressional subcommittee he did not approve of last Wednesday's violence at two struck Shakespeare companies' plants here.

The union official, Stanley Glace, added that he did not know that the invasion of 200 to 300 unionists that preceded the violence was scheduled.

Hearings on the riot began before Representative Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) today. He is a member of the House Labor Committee.

Huffman said United States marshals had been unable to serve Shane with a subpena in the past 24 hours.

Gov. Kim Sigler is scheduled to testify next week.

Hoffman asked Glace if he, disapproving of the violence, had been forced into a position of condoning it by higher union officials.

"I don't know," Glace answered, moving nervously.

C. Lawrence Boyle of Essexville, Mich., who said he was union field representative in charge of the strike, charged that the companies were violating Federal law by importing strike-breakers from other States "and possibly even Mexico."

"It is absolutely untrue that we are importing strike-breakers," replied William Balz, company vice president.

The union, striking for security since September 3, has admitted sending a caravan of cars to the plant Wednesday.

Pacific Coast Seamen End Sailing Delay

San Francisco, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—A jurisdictional dispute that had delayed a return to work in the Pacific Coast maritime strike was cleared up tonight, and West Coast shipowners announced they expect to resume waterfront operations Monday.

Negotiators for the Sailors Union of the Pacific (AFL) and the West Coast shipowners jointly announced, after a bargaining session, that they had reached a clarification of a knotty jurisdictional problem that had nullified a settlement reached by five CIO and independent dock and seafaring unions after a 93-day strike.

Federal Conciliator Omar Hoskins announced the sailors' union had been informed that the new longshoremen's contract which ended the dockside phase of the walkout in no way infringed on the sailors' traditional rights to do stevedore work in small ports of the Alaskan trade.

It was SUP Chief Harry Lundeberg's adamant stand on retention of the traditional right that had blocked an immediate end to the costly tie-up.

Bastian Boomed As U. S. Bar Head

Walter M. Bastian, Washington attorney, was boomed for next president of the American Bar Association by Associate Justice Wiley Rutledge of the United States Supreme Court last night.

Rutledge proposed Bastian for the office before 1200 lawyers at the annual banquet of the Bar Association of the District of Columbia at the Mayflower. The associate justice was the principal speaker, and Bastian was the toastmaster. Among honored guests who heard Rutledge compliment the local lawyers for "the good job you are doing" was Chief Justice of the United States Fred M. Vinson.

The Junior Bar Section of the District Bar was presented a plaque in appreciation of its preparation of a practice manual for the courts of the District.

Highlight of the evening was a musical comedy skit staged by the Junior Bar, under a Latin title liberally translated as "The Law Does Not Notice Tiny Things," kidding the law, courts and judges in a laugh-provoking burlesque about an injured pedestrian who sues and carries his case to the Supreme Court to get back his $2 collateral.

The obvious delight with which the skit was received was a tribute to its authors, Edgar J. Goodrich and Warren W. Grimes; its producer, W. Cameron Burton, and its director, Denis E. Connell.

Other guests at the dinner included Associate Justices of the Supreme Court William O. Douglas and Harold H. Burton, Chief Judge Harold M. Stevens and Judges Wilbur K. Miller, Bennett Champ Clark, E. Barrett Prettyman, Henry W. Edgerton and James M. Proctor of the United States Court of Appeals; Chief Judge Marvin Jones of the United States Court of Claims; the entire District Court bench; Presiding Judge Bolon B. Turner of the United States Tax Court, and the entire bench of the Municipal Court of Appeals.

From the Municipal Court were Chief Judge George P. Barse, John P. McMahon, Walter J. Casey, George D. Neilson, Aubrey B. Fennell, Thomas D. Quinn, Nadine L. Gallagher, Ellen K. Raedy and Frank H. Myers.

Mrs. Meyer Scores Release of Pupils

Council Plan

Protestants Will Stress Evangelism

Cincinnati, Dec. 4 (AP).—Bishop John S. Stamm, new president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, plans a "greater emphasis" on evangelism during his two-year term.

This was the No. 1 point in a program Bishop Stamm outlined to newsmen after adjournment of the council's biennial convention yesterday.

"I plan to place greater emphasis on evangelism to win new church members, even though Protestant Church membership now is the highest in American history," said the senior bishop of the Evangelical United Brethren Church.

Three Other Points

Bishop Stamm's other points:

"2. Enlistment of more laymen and youths in all phases of church activity from local congregations to interdenominational councils.

"3. More research into the basic facts needed to guide church policy in dealing with all religious problems, but particularly in social, economic and international fields.

"4. More vigorous Christian social action to apply the gospel and love and brotherhood to all human affairs."

For Council Action

Two of the knottier problems were left to the organization's executive council.

One is a resolution calling for abolishing the House Committee on un-American Activities. That one was handed outright to the executive council for disposal later.

The other is a resolution calling on the United States to form no military alliance with the Franco government in Spain. It was approved in principal by the convention but the text was referred back to the department of international justice and good will for study.

New York City (Spl.), Dec. 4.—Abolition of the released time program for religious instruction as an invasion of the "legally established hours of education" in public schools was advocated today by Mrs. Eugene Meyer.

Mrs. Meyer, wife of the chairman of the board of The Washington Post, told a meeting of the United Parents Associations of New York City: "If ever the day should come when this program is legally established, the schools would be asked to surrender more and more time. In some parts of the country the clergy are already telling the teachers what they can teach during the released time hour, so that they will not have to meet the competition of interesting school programs—a rank injustice to the children who remain at school."

Under the released time program, those children whose parents wish them to take religious instruction are freed from school for a certain period each week while the other children continue their classes.

There is also a dismissed time program under which all children are freed from school for a certain period, during which religious instruction can be obtained if desired.

Mrs. Meyer, who referred only to the released time program in her address, said:

"Since the public school has (a) primary mission to strengthen community solidarity, to stabilize family life and give all children a sense of brotherhood, it should refuse categorically to become the battleground of sectarian religious beliefs."

She said she realized she was speaking to a community "where the released time program is managed better than anywhere else," but declared the program is "one more unsuitable function the schools are being asked to perform."

Mrs. Meyer said the schools should affirm that it is not their business "to check the attendance of pupils in a religious institution, or to break the harmony of the school by these sectarian classifications."

She charged that the released time program "has created a bitter conflict between the churches that is tearing asunder our communities, our society and our Nation. If something is not done immediately to bring an accord among the leading clergy, this nation is headed toward the catastrophic impact of the most serious religious strife this country has ever experienced."

"What is the use," she asked, of "trying to stabilize society with better schools, housing, health and welfare provisons, recreation, or other amenities of life, when sectarian religious leaders are fragmentizing our society in bitterly hostile camps and using the schools as the cockpit for this ignominous struggle."

Mrs. Meyer predicted that "the end of this controversy is not in sight. The Supreme Court decision in the McCollum case brought not peace but more intensified acrimony." (The Supreme Court in the McCollom case outlawed "released time" instruction in public school buildings. The court did not pass on "released time" instruction outside of school structures.)

"Just as it is disastrous to family life if parents abdicate their responsibilities to the school, so it is disastrous to the churches to abdicate their responsibilities in however small a degree to the schools," Mrs. Meyer said. "The religious training of the child is the dual responsibility of the church and the home. The attempt to make it a triple responsibility will only confuse the child's religious life."

Mrs. Meyer said the history of our country shows how and why our schools were secularized. This, she said, was a great service to the schools, the community and to individual freedom.

"For the first time," she declared, "a great nation eliminated the sectarian disputes which had corroded the European world and our own early history."

Identifying herself as one of "those of us who date back to this benign and truly American era in which church and state were rigidly separated while remaining friendly, allied forces," she said:

"Those of us who grew up in the secular public school and loved it, attained concurrently and independent of it a fundamental, systematic religious training all the more profound and lasting in influence because it emerged from close and reassuring ties between the church or the synagogue and the homes."

Supreme Court Appeal Planned in Treason Case

Boston, Dec. 4 (AP).—Defense counsel for Douglas Chandler, 59, former Baltimore, Md., newsman convicted of treason, plans to appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court. The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals affirmed the conviction of Chandler yesterday.

Known as "Paul Revere" of Germany's wartime propaganda radio, Chandler was sentenced to life imprisonment and fined $10,000 after his conviction by a Federal Court jury in June, 1947.

Nine Clerics Summoned for Allegedly Failing to File Marriage Notices

summons Saturday afternoon, was of surprise and bewilderment.

The Rev. Mr. Pruden said, "I have turned in everything I have, to the best of my knowledge, within the 10-day period. Of course, some people take out licenses and never use them."

The Rev. Mr. Porter, pastor of Westminster Memorial Presbyterian Church, said, "They have always been kind enough to send us a notice if we were delinquent any length of time. I am not aware of having any reports that should be in. It is sort of a tough Christmas present to get.

The Rev. Mr. Bird, sr., pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, Presbyterian, said he may have been negligent a year ago when a number of clergymen were fined, "but I am not aware of any dereliction now. It is perfectly right the court should be informed of marriages performed."

The Rev. Mr. Turley, pastor of Mount Gilead Baptist Church, said he had no marriage licenses out: "Insofar as I know, all have been returned."

The Rev. Mr. Queally, rector of the Church of the Transfiguration, Episcopal, said, "I am positive I am not behind with any of my marriage license reports. I haven't a single one out now."

Some Never Used

The Rev. Mr. Miers, pastor of Fourth Presbyterian Church, said he doesn't know of any violation. "I usually send them in within three or four days. Sometimes people take out licenses," he said "and never get married, and the clergyman's name appears on the license."

The Rev. Mr. Wood, St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Rock Creek, also said he was aware of no violation of the law. "I just turn the licenses over to my secretary for attention," he said.

The Rev. Mr. Harrison, Shiloh Baptist Church, said he was late in reporting three weddings when the question originally came up, but not recently.

The Rev. Mr. Williams, pastor of the Bible Way Church, is out of the city and not expected to return until Wednesday, it was said at his home.

This is the second time within a year that the clerk of District Court, which keeps all marriage licenses here, has complained that a considerable number of the local clergy have been remiss in filing their reports within 10 days of performing the marriage.

The maximum penalty for overdue marriage reports is a $50 fine or a year in jail.

"We have been over this before," King said, alluding to the May campaign when more than 200 clergymen were named in the District Court's complaints. "Many of those on the present list were warned then or paid small collateral."

King said his new list was based on a comparison of the date of the marriage given on the license with the date of the receipt of the report, and that the list of offenders is being compared with the old one.

"In many instances the clergyman probably has a legitimate explanation," King said, "but if he has six violations, he probably doesn't."

Mass Cancer Survey Hit

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Two Mayo clinic radiologists said today that mass X-ray surveys to detect early stomach cancer in persons over 40 are "impossible and impractical."

Cancer grows so fast and with such little warning that 42 million persons over 40 would have to be examined every three months to be sure of detecting the tumor early, they said.

"It would take 1917.6 roentgenologists examing a stomach every two minutes for eight hours steadily every day of the year, including Sundays and holidays, year after year continuously, to make a satisfactory survey of this group of people every three months," they said.

The report, written for the American Journal of Roentgenology and Radium Therapy, by Drs. B. R. Kirklin and John R. Hodgson of Rochester, Minn., said sufferers should be taught to consult their family physician at the first indication of stomach disorder.

However, they reported several well known stomach cancer authorities have failed to recognize the disease in themselves until too late.

Ninety-five percent of all such cancers occur in persons over 40.

Tax Deadline Must Stand In Arlington

Members of the Arlington County Board agreed yesterday they were without jurisdiction to extend the deadline for payment of State and local taxes, due at midnight Monday.

The decision was reached after the board received a legal opinion on a proposal that they extend the deadline because Arlington tax bills were mailed late, and in many bills were mailed late.

The opinion, submitted by Commonwealth's Attorney Denman T. Rucker, placed the responsibility solely on State authorities. Rucker said he could find no legal authority for a local exception to the State-wide deadline.

The Virginia taxes actually were due today, but taxpayers were given an additional 24 hours of grace due to the fact that the deadline was scheduled on a Sunday.

morning had dubbed the action of the charter committee "a double cross for the citizens of Upper Montgomery County."

He charged that Ligon, named as one of the charter slate nominees, actually is a Baltimore businessman and that Selby is a miller and not a farmer while Kelley is a lawyer at Rockville and also a member of the charter committee which had pledged itself not to seek office or favors for any of its members.

Meanwhile, Col. E. Brooke Lee stated that he and his close associate, Lacy Shaw, "recognize that the (charter slate) group includes two gentlemen who have been recent Republican county candidates and one Republican who is a recognized party leader; also two Democrats who are markedly unfriendly to the Democratic organization and Dr. Meriam, whose politics we do not know.

"However, for reasons previously stated, we intend to organize, work and vote for the entire charter slate," Colonel Lee said.

The previous reasons were that the charter group had won the election and is entitled to elect its own chosen people, to place the charter in operation so that no sabotage can be alleged if it fails.

Brooke Johns, president of the Board of County Commisioners, and Wesley I. Sauter, commissioner from Bethesda, who now technically are members of the County Council ad interim, declared they expect their suit now pending in the courts will make unnecessary the nomination of any charter candidates for two years.

They contend that the Constitution prohibits local elections except two years after the presidential elections and that they should remain in office as county councilmen until their term expires in 1950. Should the courts overrule the suit, an election will be held January 6 to elect a county council.

Johns said he possibly might be a candidate for the seven-man council if the suit should be denied by the courts.

Anders R. Lofstrand of Rockville, Republican and chairman of the county delegation to the General Assembly, said he considered the charter slate "very nice" but appeared doubtful it would get many cheers from the Democrats.

Wilbur Rogers of Takoma Park, former president of the Takoma Park Republican Club, said the action of the Charter Committee in forcing the slate down the throats of the voters is "worse than anything Brooke Lee ever did in his palmiest days. The charter committee has made a fatal step they will never live down," he said.

The Arlington County Board yesterday authorized an "exploratory" survey to determine whether a full-scale investigation of Rosslyn Gas Co. rates is justified.

J. Paul Blundon of Keyser, W. Va., was engaged to analyze the company's rate structure and $3000 was appropriated to cover initial costs of the survey. Blundon previously had been recommended for the job by the county's public utilities commission.

The preliminary probe was approved after the West Virginia analyst appeared before the board and told them what the initial survey would entail. Blundon said it first would be necessary to scan the utility's general rate structure, pick out whatever rate phases "appeared to be out of line," and then proceed with an over-all investigation.

Although conceding the preliminary survey "possibly" would show no legitimate rates complaint, Blundon said his first observations showed that Rosslyn rates were "about five times" those in effect in his own home city.

He added that Arlingtonians paid about twice as much for natural gas as the highest rates he had encountered "anywhere in the country."

The preliminary survey, Blundon told the board, would require from six to seven weeks, depending on "how much, if any, cooperation we receive from the gas company." In the event the study shows a full investigation to be desired, the probe would cost "conservatively, $10,000," he said.

A motion to authorize the survey was made by Board Member Basil DeLashmutt, who made an apparent about-face when he called for the probe after questioning its advisability at length. He explained he merely wanted to find out if the survey was "worth the proposed expenditure."

Family Calls Death Murder

but the investigation was being continued.

At the Scheer apartment at 1413 Saratoga ave. ne., a man who said he was a brother of Scheer but refused to further identify himself insisted to a reporter for The Washington Post over the telephone that Scheer was murdered. He refused to say why or to discuss the matter further. Newsmen shortly afterward called at the apartment but the family refused to open the door or to discuss through the peep-hole opening in the door their charge that a murder had been committed. They pleaded they were too grief-stricken.

Heard No Noise

Scheer's clothing store has an apartment over it occupied by Nathan Postell, a laborer at the Washington Terminal; his wife, Olive, and their three sons, 12, 14 and 18 years old.

"We didn't hear any noise in the store when Mr. Scheer was found last Monday night," said Mrs. Postell. "Our radio is usually on about that time and we might not have heard anything unusual if there had been anything like that. The store was here before we moved here six years ago. Mr. Scheer was a good man and was well liked in the neighborhood."

Scheer's physician, Dr. Harry Friedenberg, 4519 36th st. nw., said the merchant was semi-conscious when he was found, lapsed into unconsciousness shortly afterward and never regained consciousness. The doctor said at no time was Scheer able to talk, to explain what had happened to him. He said X-rays made within 18 hours after he was found established his skull had been fractured. He declined to discuss how the fracture may have occurred.

Inspector Robert Bryant, chief of detectives, said the robbery squad, rather than the homicide squad, was working on the case because "sometimes the robbery squad has better contacts in certain neighborhoods."

"Scheer might have been the victim of a robber or a holdup man," said Bryant, "but he told several persons, some time before he was found semi-conscious, that he felt sick. If that sickness was brought on by someone striking him in a robbery attempt, we have not found anyone he told about any such attempt."

Two Women Thankful to Blood Donors

One woman whose very being depends on the availability of whole blood at regular intervals, and another who this past Wednesday received her thirty-seventh transfusion, benefitted from blood donated and distributed by the Washington Regional Blood Center.

Mrs. Addie M. Best of 2128 North Pollard st., went to the Arlington Hospital as an "outpatient" on Thursday for another in a long series of blood transfusions on which her very life hangs as she fights the devitalizing effects of aplastic anemia.

Mrs. Best's blood is a rare type, A Rh negative, which at times is difficult to obtain for patients. However, thus far, the Red Cross has been able to supply it when needed.

Another patient who feels particularly grateful to the Red Cross volunteer donors is Miss Constance Y. Lewis, 26-year-old clerical employe of the District public schools, who is receiving treatment at Freedmen's Hospital.

On Wednesday, Miss Lewis of 124 V st. nw., received her thirty-seventh pint of blood since she was admitted to the hospital suffering from the bleeding disease known as "thrombo-cytopenia purpura." At the time she entered the hospital in a serious condition, she had suffered complete destruction of the bone marrow, according to hospital authorities.

A total of 573 pints of blood received from volunteer donors at the Red Cross Washington Regional Blood Center was distributed during the week. Local hospitals received 353 pints, with 220 going to institutions in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and New York.

The blood was distributed as follows:

District of Columbia—Casualty Hospital, 7; Children's, 10; Columbia, 9; Doctors, 26; Emergency, 46; Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat, 1; Florence Crittenden Home, 2; Freedmen's, 24; Gallinger, 12; Garfield Memorial, 6; Georgetown University Hospital, 31; George Washington University Hospital, 114; Homeopathic, 5; Mount Alto Veterans, 15; Sibley Memorial, 28; St. Elizabeths, 15, and United States Soldiers Home Hospital, 2.

Maryland—Suburban Hospital, Bethesda, 14; Prince Georges, Cheverly, 13; Washington Sanitarium and Hospital, Takoma Park, 6; Warren Hospital, Laurel, 1; Glenn Dale Sanatorium, 13; Leland Memorial, Riverdale, 3; Washington County General, Hagerstown, 27; University of Maryland Hospital, Baltimore, 7.

Virginia—Winchester Memorial, 19; Loudoun County Hospital, Leesburg, 4; Arlington Hospital, 22; Alexandria Hospital, 30; Circle Terrace, Alexandria, 2; Mary Washington, Fredericksburg, 11; Physicians' Hospital, Warrenton, 4; United States Naval, Quantico, 5.

West Virginia—City Hospital, Martinsburg, 12; and Newton D. Baker General, Martinsburg, 23.

New York—Memorial Hospital, New York City, 4.

Bolling Field's Three 'Bouncing' Babies in Triplicate

By Henry Rohland—The Washington Post

CHUCKLERS THREE—To Bolling Field's Butler triplets—6 month old in January—the world is a pretty swell place. Terry, Bobby and Diana, sitting in their "bouncing chairs," chuckle all the while. They are the children of Air Force Capt. and Mrs. Robert H. Butler of 210 Oakwood st. se. They were born June 9 in the airbase hospital, at which time physicians attributed their vigorous health to the physical backgrounds of the parents. Captain Butler, 31, a former football player, is physical instructor at the field, and Mrs. Butler, 28, was for 19 years a member of the famed Merriel Abbott dancers

D.C. Hospitals Consider Separate Campaign

pital officials point out that the present tight definition of "indigent" does not permit the using up of all the money made available by Congress for this purpose.

The problem is also being studied by the newly formed Greater Washington Hospitalization Fund Committee, made up of representatives of all interested groups including the hospitals, Chest, District government and the general public.

The hospital council contends that costs per patient now average from $14 to $15 a day, as compared with less than $7.50 a day provided for "semi-indigents" paid for out of Community Chest funds. The $7.50 was scheduled to rise to $11 a day, assuming that the Chest met its goal.

The District government, on the other hand, is prepared to pay up to $9 a day under contract with private hospitals for care to "total indigents" who cannot be handled at public hospitals. The contract also provides $2 for each clinic treatment.

Nine District hospitals have negotiated these contracts with the District, but have not been satisfied with the District's definition of the term "indigent." However, Children's, Providence, Emergency, and Episcopal Eye, Ear and Throat Hospitals have signed the contracts thus far.

$735,000 Appropriated

Congress has appropriated $735,000 for District "total indigents" for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949. Included in this sum is $45,000 earmarked for the Washington Home for Incurables.

Of the $690,000 remaining, the District has authorized and approved payment of only $148,465 to the nine private hospitals, according to Henry Gavens, chief fiscal officer of the District Health Department.

Reimbursements authorized include $22,950 to Casualty Hospital and $6215 to Georgetown Hospital for care given from July 1 through September. For care of indigents through October, the amounts approved are $49,847 for Children's Hospital; $38,408 for Emergency Hospital; $7875 for Episcopal; $2615 for Garfield; $3878 for George Washington, and $16,687 for Providence.

Officials of Columbia Hospital, which has received none of the reimbursement funds, have indicated they would wait to sign a contract with the District until the "indigency" definition is decided.

On the basis of District Budget Director Walter L. Fowler's present interpretation of the appropriation bill for indigent reimbursement, hospitals are unable to collect for care of any patients who can pay any amount, no matter how small, toward their bills.

District Health Officer George C. Ruhland has proposed that the District Government apply a liberalized version of an "indigency" scale now used at Gallinger Hospital, the municipal hospital that treats most indigent patients.

Scale Proposed

Dr. Ruhland has proposed that a person with one dependent earning a gross monthly income of between $100 and $200 may qualify as an indigent. The scale would range upward to a $300 to $520 limitation for a patient with 10 dependents.

His proposal has been referred to West to determine whether it could be applied to the District's contract arrangement with the hospitals.

If his proposal cannot be reconciled with the language of the congressional appropriation for indigent care, the Commissioners will probably ask Congress to change the wording of the act, Dr. Ruhland said yesterday.

Another proposal of Dr. Ruhland's, made last week, for a program of home treatment of previously hospitalized indigent patients, was indorsed in principle by both Castle and James G. Capossela, vice president of the Hospital Council.

Dr. Ruhland urged a plan whereby the District would pay the hospital supplying the physician for such a home visit $2 a visit, with extra payment for special service.

Castle said the proposal "sounds reasonable, as it should reduce the number of patients who have to come back to the hospital."

Capossela declared he thought Dr. Ruhland "on the right track," in urging the post-hospitalization care program.

"The community has to be concerned about what happens to needy patients after they leave the hospital," he said, "and, as in public assistance work, these cases have to be followed up."

Also involved in what one official called the "hospitalization mess" is the fate of the Hospital Service Agency, an organization set up to administer Community Chest hospitalization funds and to collect a portion of the cost from those able to make some payment.

The Hospital Council has asked that it be stripped of its power to control hospital admissions or abolished altogether. Its fate is one of the problems before the newly-formed hospitalization fund committee.

The new Chest Federation Hospitalization Fund Committee is set up under the chairmanship of Chester Morrill, Federal Reserve System attorney.

Its members are: Mrs. Henry Gichner, chairman of the federation public relations committee; Daniel W. O'Donoghue, jr., of the hospital council; Dr. Watson W. Eldridge of the HSA; Representative A. L. Miller (R., Nebr.), a physician, chairman of the House District Committee's subcommittee on health, education and recreation; Budget Officer Fowler; Dr. Daniel L. Seckinger, coordinator of health and hospitals of the District Health Department; Dr. Robert H. Groh, representing the District of Columbia Medical Society; Dr. Vane M. Hoge of the United States Public Health Service; Frank R. Jelleff, representing Group Hospitalization, Inc., and Dr. Winfred Overholser, superintendent, St. Elizabeth's Hospital, for United Community Services.

Three members were appointed to represent the public. They are Franklin H. Kenworthy, vice president and comptroller of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co.; Fred S. Walker, editor of the Trades Unionist, AFL publication, and Mrs. Ernest W. Howard of 1521 Monroe st. nw.

Others Appointed

Appointed to represent the Chest units outside the District were Milton R. Greenland, Alexandria, Va.; Stephen M. Smith, Arlington, Va.; Donald Gray, Fairfax County, Va.; Mrs. Lucile Smith, Montgomery County, Md., and Mrs. Georgia K. Benjamin, Prince Georges County, Md.

Establishment of a subcommittee on hospital operation methods, economics and deficits, composed of Fowler, Dr. Hoge and Dr. Groh, drew the criticism of Hospital Council President Castle, who said yesterday the subcommittee would be useless, as far as he could see.

Castle said he thought it "rather absurd" that no hospital official was named to this subcommittee.

A separate subcommittee on indigent patients in the hospitalization comittee includes O'Donoghue, Dr. Overholser and Kenworthy. Dr. Seckinger, Greenland and Mrs. Howard constitute the subcommittee on group and cooperative contract plans, while Representative Miller, Mrs. Smith and Gray will handle conclusions and reports.

Another new group that will study the indigent problem is the health and hospital section of United Community Services, under the chairmanship of Dr. Overholser.

The group is a successor to the Metropolitan Health Council, a Chest Federation unit that covered the Washington area. The group will meet soon to consider a number of "very helpful proposals" by members, Dr. Overholser said.

The Federal Diary

Hoover Commission Unagreed on Veteran Job Placement Plan

How veterans should be selected for Federal jobs is one of those complicated and politically sensitive problems that's plaguing the Hoover Commissioin.

The real objective of the commission is to find a formula of selection that would benefit both the Government and the veteran. No one can dispute the fact that misfit placements hurts all concerned. The present system admittedly, leads to too many square-peg-in-round-hole placements.

If the Hoover group would do nothing more than to find a better system of employe selection—to put people in the jobs they are qualified to fill—it would have made an invaluable contribution to better Government.

Up to now, however, the commission and its advisers haven't been able to reach a firm agreement. In fact, the proposed selection plan is said to have been hanged four times in the past two weeks, and other revisions are in prospect before a final decision is made.

The original idea of the Hoover group on the selection of veterans for Federal jobs was revolutionary. It provided first for the establishment of veteran placement offices within the Civil Service Commission throughout the Nation.

A veteran who would like to work for Uncle Sam would be directed to the placement office nearest him. He would then be given a job aptitude test; be given an interview by a counselor and job placement expert who would tell him what Federal job, or jobs, he was qualified for, and which agencies had openings he could fill.

The veteran would be given a rating on his written and oral tests. He would be given one of these adjective ratings: outstanding, well qualified, qualified, or unqualified. He could be rated outstanding for payroll clerk, for example, and merely qualified for accountant and unqualified for auditor.

This sense-making plan has tremendous significance as the following points will prove:

1. Those who take Civil Service jobs would no longer be given numerical ratings, from 0 to 100;

2. Civil Service exams would be open to veterans on a continuing basis; they could apply and be examined for any and all jobs at anytime;

3. Above all, the veteran would be given help in finding a Federal job he was qualified to fill. As it is today, he's too often shunted from one person and one agency to another because it's feared he may be a misfit—or that he isn't nearly as well qualified as other eligibles on the Civil Service list;

4. Civil Service would no longer certify the first three eligibles on a list and require an agency to take one of them. Instead, the agency would be permitted to pick any one of the "outstanding" people first, then "well-qualified" and finally the "qualified." Veterans would have to be chosen first in each of these groups before nonveterans could be hired, and finally,

5. The proposal could lead to better selection methods of both veterans and nonveterans in Government—to get away from the tricky mental tests which aren't accurate judges of a person's abilities. Able war service people who have proven their abilities on the job—the acid test—are fired daily because they failed a mental test which had little connection with their work.

This general plan, it's reported, was proposed only after research on Civil Service's eligible registers, which would convince anyone that something was sadly lacking in the commission's present recruiting methods. It plainly showed that an alarmingly high percentage of veterans who were rated eligible on some Civil Service tests would have been rated unqualified for those particular jobs, by aptitude tests, but the later exams showed they had outstanding qualifications for some other Federal jobs.

It goes without saying that when a person is put in a job he doesn't like and if he believes his abilities are being wasted—well, that makes for trouble and discontent. Proper placement of employes would result in far-reaching economies in Government and a happier lot for them. What could be more important?

But how much of this plan will ever see the light of day is highly questionable. The plan for aptitude tests, for giving job applicants adjective ratings, etc., are reported to have been watered down in the past week or so. At this point, few people are satisfied with the revisions.

It would be a crime if any plan that would improve employe selection is sidetracked. The Government today is becoming more and more a specialized field which requires special talents. Yet the stand-patters refuse to concede this; they still believe that any person can be picked out of the blue and do a Goverment job as well as anyone else. Unfortunately, some of the Civil Service practices encourage this belief.

The underlying principle of the Civil Service system is the selection of the best qualified persons for Federal jobs. Actually, that doesn't always happen in practice and everyone knows it. Eventually, the selection system must be improved but the opportunity to do it is now. It may be years before any group comparable to the Hoover Commission is set up to study Government administration.

Federation Will Ask for Fast Action On School

Appeal Is Voted To Commissioners On River Terrace Site Acquisition

By James B. Graham
Post Reporter

The District Commissioners will be asked to take "immediate action" for acquisition of a school site for the River Terrace area by the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The move was made by the group last night in the board room of the District Building after its support was sought by Robert F. Tibbetts, president of the Citizens' Association of River Terrace.

The resolution also directed Federation President John H. Connaughton to appoint a special emergency committee to call upon the Commissioners with the request.

$50,000 Appropriated

Tibbetts told the body that $50,000 had been appropriated by Congress in 1946 for purchase of the site, the Gonzaga athletic field at 34th and Dix sts. ne. The money is in possession of the Commissioners, he said he was told by Commissioner Gordon Young two weeks ago.

Justifying his request for action on an emergency basis, Tibbetts said a survey of River Terrace showed that there would be 800 children of elementary school age in the development in 1950. He said this is the earliest date that completion of the project could be expected.

Harry N. Stull and Clifford H. Newell, both past presidents, supported the River Terrace motion from the floor. Said Stull:

"The fact that the money is appropriated and on hand is sufficient justification for the federation to take action."

Acted 2 Years Ago

Newell pointed out that the civic body two years ago went on record requesting purchase of the site. He supported the appointment of the special committee, saying: "It is only fittting that we get to work to get action."

A school needs table released by the Board of Education Thursday indicated approval of the project in the Strayer report, General Young's six-year program, the Board of Trade's school and finance committees and its own May 1946 program.

William D. Leahy, chairman of the Washington Chest X-Ray Campaign conducted last spring urged support of the Christmas Seal campaign.

He told of shortages in the hospital staff at the Tuberculosis Sanitorium at Glenn Dale, where of 13 physicians authorized for the staff only five positions have been filled. Funds are needed to raise the salaries of staff doctors and to provide needed living quarters, he said.

Ralph L. Donnelly, chairman of the membership and credentials committee, and defeated candidate for president in last month's federation elections, was voted the member who contributed the "most outstanding community service" during the year.

The federation opposed transfer of a liquor license at 3016 Nichols ave. se., which was said to be in close proximity to the Congress Heights School and St. Elizabeths Hospital; directed its member groups to cooperate with the Inaugural Housing Committee in providing accommodations for visitors, and voted to cancel its first 1949 meeting, scheduled for January 1.

18th Century Music Heard Second Night

By Paul Hume

The Friends of Music of Dumbarton Oaks heard a second evening of eighteenth century music last night.

Once again the program was drawn from Handel, Mozart and Haydn. Once again it showed how much is missing from our regular concerts today, through our neglect of these so-called popular masters. Ralph Kirkpatrick was heard in an early B flat clavier concerto of Mozart, while Alexander Schneider, Georg Ockner and George Ricci played solo violins and cello in a Handel concerto grosso. Schneider directed the entire program while playing, concluding with the seventh symphony of Haydn.

This symphony, entitled "Midi," showed even greater charm and witty imagination than its companion, "Matin," heard the previous day. The old custom of dividing movements into two parts is heard in three movements of the work with fine effect. Wind instruments speaking clearly through a small body of strings is an effect unheard in modern concerts. The music itself has a bewitching way of holding your attention.

The tone of the clavier tends, to our ears, toward monotony. Yet it is certainly a faithful reproduction of the sounds for which Mozart wrote concertos we generally hear on a piano.

Ralph Kirkpatrick's style in such music is impeccable, and filled with a vitality that sustains every phrase. He and Schneider are as one in interpreting these works, which makes their concerts thoroughly satifying experiences.

Schneider's accomplishments were not limited to last night's music. Earlier in the day he played the first two sonatas and first partita for unaccompanied violin by Bach. These works, half of Bach's total output for solo violin, are never heard publicly, except for the chaconne that concludes the D minor partita. Few violinists understand the nature of the music sufficiently to attempt them. Of those few, not all can manage the constant and terrifying technical demands.

Schneider, profiting from studying these works with Pablo Casals, acknowledged master of such literature, played them as we have never heard him play before. To say that technical matters were forgotten seems incredible—yet it was so. Schneider exposed the shape and great lines of these works in scholarly fashion, but never failed to impress their eminent melodic content. His work was in every way admirable.

They were identified as John T. Webner, 24, of Alexandria, Va., and Robert Wannall, 24, of 3300 Clay pl. ne. Six Injured, Two Seriously, In D. C. Traffic

Six persons were injured in District traffic accidents yesterday as Virginia authorities tried to identify a pedestrian killed by an automobile on U. S. Route 1 below Woodbridge, Va., on Friday night.

Robert Wannall, 24, of 3300 Clay pl. ne., and John T. Webner, 24, of Alexandria, Va., were in serious condition with skull fractures in Casualty Hospital after a motorcycle they were riding struck a parked taxicab at 100 Massachusetts ave. nw. at 2 a. m. The cycle skidded, overturned and threw both riders to the street.

Twenty-months-old John David Dowell suffered a possible skull fracture when an automobile driven by his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth S. Dowell, 41, of 4 Sycamore ave., Takoma Park, Md., was in collision at 10:50 a. m. at 14th and Iris sts. nw with another car operated by Mary P. Cairns, 18, of 7705 14th st. nw. The child was admitted to Children's Hospital.

Norris M. Smith, 23, of 54 I st. sw., bicycle delivery boy for the Westchester Pharmacy, 4000 Cathedral ave. nw., was admitted to Providence Hospital with possible knee fracture and abrasions after he was struck at 1:15 p. m. in the 3900 block of Cathedral ave. by an automobile driven by Col. Lloyd E. Mielenz, 52, of 2357 Nebraska ave., according to police.

John Kirianoglou, 62, of 600 Tewksbury pl. nw., was taken to Casualty Hospital with a broken leg and back injuries, police reported, after he was struck at 1:48 p. m. at 5th and K sts. nw., by a trolley car operated by Monroe J. Bickard, 33, of 1578 41st st. se.

Catherine Minnicks, 8, of 528 3d st. nw., suffered a bruised chest when she darted against a red light, police say, into the path of an automobile driven by Howard Q. Reynolds, 34, of 3429 S. Stafford st., Arlington, an Agriculture Department clerk, at 11:23 a. m. at 4th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw. She was treated at Emergency Hospital.

The unidentified traffic victim in Virginia was a Negro, about 40, apparently a laborer, possibly employed at the new power plant under construction at Possum Point. He was walking on U. S. Route 1 about four miles south of Woodbridge about 7:10 p. m. Friday when hit by an automobile driven, police said, by W. T. Gilbert, 55, of Philadelphia. The man carried 80 cents, a package of razor blades and no marks of identification.

Shooting in Swing's Office Is Laid to 'Money Matters'

Edward Marshall Swing, 60-year-old coffee merchant, charged with shooting a former employe twice in the thigh, said yesterday the shooting occurred as a result of an argument over "money matters."

Swing, who appeared briefly in Municipal Court, was freed on $3000 bond. The case was continued until January 6.

The victim, Malcolm B. Talbert, 38, of 1737 Minnesota ave. se., who worked as a salesman for Swing for 14 years, was reported in good condition at Mount Alto Veterans Hospital. He refused to comment yesterday on the shooting, except to say it started as just a "friendly argument."

In court, according to Assistant United States Attorney Robert E. Short, Swing stated that Talbert entered his private office at 1013 E st. nw. in a drunken condition and without permission. He said he told Talbert to leave, but that Talbert grabbed a bookweight from the desk and threatened him. Swing said he pulled a .32-caliber revolver from his desk and shot Talbert twice in the left thigh.

Through his attorney, R. E. L. Goff, Swing later stated that Talbert had wanted to borrow some money, but that he had refused. Six weeks ago, Swing said, he had lent Talbert money to buy clothes.

Mrs. Talbert, who is employed in an 11th st. candy store owned by Swing, did not work yesterday. She had been called from her job by Swing to take her husband home, Swing said, and witnessed the shooting.

Talbert left his job as salesman for Swing three years ago. He was currently employed as a cab driver.

New York Check On Stolen Clothing Proves Futile

A tip that some of the 3000 garments stolen from a local cleaning plant November 16 might be found in New York in a shipment of clothing destined for the needy of Europe proved unfounded yesterday.

Detective Sergts. Francis Gaver and J. T. McCarthy were sent to New York to see if they could locate any part of the $25,000 worth of garments taken from the Luna Cleaners plant, 1605 14th st. nw.

Lieut. Aubrey Tolson, head of the general assignment squad, said the men have not yet returned but they had informed him by telephone there was nothing to the tip.

Chest Campaign Failure Is Threat To Welfare Fund

Budget in Doubt

Chest to Get Any Profits Of Inaugural

Any profits from the 1949 inaugural ceremonies will go to the Community Chest, Melvin D. Hildreth, chairman of the inaugural committee, said yesterday.

At the same time, he emphasized that the committee's first concern is to pay back "100 cents on the dollar" to Washingon businessmen who underwrite the inaugural budget—expected to be at least 150,000, and possibly $200,000.

The committee, he said, will open bids Monday for construction of parade stands and other naugural expenses. "Then," he said, "we'll know how much we have to spend."

Hildreth declared his group has no desire "to make a profit this year by high prices." Costs will be held as low as possible, he said, in line with President Truman's keep wish to keep the ceremonies simple and inexpensive.

Congress Help May Be Asked

In order to take some of the financial load from the committee, however, Hildreth said Congress may be requested to pay, by appropriation, the cost of parade stands occupied by nonpaying guests.

The Joint Congressional Inaugural Committee, it was learned, has under study a proposal that President Truman and Vice President-elect Barkley take the oath of office on the same rostrum.

Usually, the Vice President has been sworn in before the Senate itself in ceremonies preceding the President's inauguration.

The change would permit the television and radio audience to enjoy the Vice Presidential inauguration as well as that of the President.

Hildreth predicted the inauguration could show a profit this year, pointing out that nearly $40,000 has been taken in so far from ticket applications.

A total of 750,000 persons are expected for the ceremonies.

Freedom Train Due

Among other attractions, according to Hildreth, will be the Freedom Train, which will wind up its tour of the country with a week's stay here during the inaugural.

The parade, he said, will last several hours.

Floats are being lined up from every State. The winning Rose Bowl float may be in line of march, he said.

The committee hopes to have 40,000 parade stand seats for the inaugural, and is certain it will have 37,000 seats, Hildreth said. Applications for tickets in the $6, $7, $8 and $9 brackets are still being received at committee headquarters, Room 123, Tariff Building, 700 E st. nw.

A spokesman said more of the less expensive seats, beginning at $2 and already sold out, may become available.

President Truman's World War I Army outfit will march in the parade, Harlan Wood, chairman of the veterans' participation committee, announced.

"We have received information from Battery D of the 129th Field Artillery, Thirty-fifth Division, that they are coming in a body" to march in the parade, he said. "This unit is composed of ex-soldiers who served in the unit under President Truman's command."

Concessions Meet Set

Richard Mansfield, chairman of the inaugural concessions committee, will hold a meeting of his group Tuesday to discuss erection of food stands along the parade route and special vending licenses for souvenir salesmen. Following the meeting, he is expected to outline concession and license rules and regulations.

While the marshaling area, its starting time, and dispersal point have not yet been determined, a committee spokesman said the parade would proceed down Constitution ave. from the area of the Capitol to Pennsylvania ave., and then along Pennsylvania past the White House.

Inauguration festivities will begin January 16 with special religious services. On January 19, stars of stage, screen and radio will participate in a concert at the National Guard Armory, 19th and East Capitol sts.

For this spectacle, two stages will be set up, so that one will be in operation while the other is being prepared for the next event.

Symphony orchestras will also participate, a phase for which Inaugural Committee Chairman Hildreth hopes to admit 1000 District school pupils at lowest possible cost, he said yesterday.

On inauguration night, the Armory will be the scene of the traditional Inauguration Ball. Admission, by invitation only, will be $10 a person. Dress will be formal.

Rooms Sought in Homes

While lining up a hotel room for the festivities is now well-nigh impossible, an all-out drive to obtain accommodations in private homes will get under way this week.

Mrs. Ernest K. Lindley, chairman of the hospitality and housing committee, predicted the District will offer "some good, old fashioned hospitality" to the 150,000 persons expected to seek rooms in private homes.

The Federation of Businessmen's Associations is pushing the drive for private home accommodations. A bureau to handle such requests, staffed by members of Mrs. Lindley's committee, will open Wednesday above the Whelan Drug Store at 14th and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

To stimulate originality in store window displays, Inaugural medals will go to those stores whose exhibits are deemed outstanding, Ben Strouse, chairman of the store display committee, said yesterday.

The program committee has announced approval of tentative plans for the souvenir booklet it will sell. The booklet will carry a history, along with illustrations, of every inaugural.

Other Factors Add To Danger Money May Be Exhausted Before Year's End

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Public welfare funds may be exhausted before the 1949 fiscal year is up—even if public assistance grants are further cut—because of the failure of the Community Chest campaign and other out-of-joint social factors in Washington.

This fear was expressed yesterday by District welfare officials as Edward J. Keyes, executive secretary of the Community Chest Federation, said the Chest campaign "isn't closed yet." He said a great deal of clear-up work remains to be done.

However, Keyes added that the Chest Federation must, before the month is out, decide what cutbacks will be needed in budgets of Chest agencies. First allocations will go to the six sectional Chest headquarters in the area, the hospital fund, and the contingency reserve fund, he said. Date for conferences on the revised budgeting has not been set, Keyes said.

Cut by 7 Per Cent

Raymond F. Clapp, assistant director of the District Department of Public Welfare, said yesterday that a 7 per cent cut in public assistance grants already has been made, and "even with that we probably will not have enough money to get through our fiscal year without further limitations."

Clapp said public welfare functions have "very definitely been affected" during the past year by the failure of last year's Chest campaign. He said it is impossible to tell how much the Chest failure weighed as a factor against other conditions that have added pressure for public welfare aids.

Among other factors are the high cost of living, the housing shortage, and the increased need for children's services.

John W. Tramburg, District Public Welfare director, explained that public welfare functions have felt a sharp rise in requests for public assistance and for children's services, at least some of which is directly traceable to the Chest campaign failure.

Tramburg said that some private agencies have had their "intake" closed down entirely for months, while others have limited intake to a bare trickle of normal. "As a result," he said "we are now experiencing one of the heaviest referrals of children to our agencies on record."

Children Cause Concern

Tramburg said he had met recently with private agencies that deal with children's services in order to correlate the available private sources with those which public welfare can offer. He said he had attempted to get a general picture of the trend in vacancies in private child welfare institutions.

The public welfare director said he was "increasingly concerned with the number of children coming to us from evicted families, with incomes, who cannot find housing within their means."

He said the problem of low-cost housing must be solved before this phase of children's services will appreciably decline.

Clapp said that some family and relief agencies in the private field had begun "closing their doors in one way or another" as early as last August. As a result, he said, there has been an "unexpected and unseasonal" increase in the number of requests coming to us, ever since midsummer.

The public welfare picture, Clapp said, is complicated by the fact that there are twice as many children born in Washington now as there were 16 years ago. As a result, the percentage of children needing help is going steadily upward, in direct ratio to the total number of children. "We have more demands for help than we can meet," he said.

'Quizdown' Contest Won by Burroughs Team

The Washington Post

AND WHO ARE THESE? THE WINNERS, OF COURSE—They are (from left) James Early, 11; John E. Nylund, 10; Frank Gibson, 11; Rodger Allen Cliff, 9; Harris Rabinovich, 10, and James Welsh, 9, all conferring with Vern Hansen, master of the Quizdown. The Burroughs School team won yesterday's Quizdown contest, sponsored by The Washington Post and broadcast over station WTOP from the Wilson Teachers College, 11th and Harvard sts. nw.

Increasing a narrow lead established in the first half, Burroughs School yesterday triumphed over Langdon-Woodridge Schools on "Quizdown."

Final score on the quiz program sponsored by The Washington Post and broadcast over WTOP from 10 to 10:30 a. m., was 1100 points for the sextet from Burroughs, at 18th and Monroe sts. ne., and 1000 points for the composite team from Langdon, 20th and Franklin sts. ne., and Woodridge, Carlton and Central aves. ne.

Burroughs put an all-boy team into the field and five of them chalked up perfect scores of 200 ponts apiece—100 points for each question correctly answered.

Among the Langdon-Woodridge quiz whizzes were two girls, both from Langdon. They were Martha Anne Heller, 12, of 2515 22d st. ne., a 6-B grader, and Nadyne Silverman, 10, of 2503 14th st. ne., a 5-B grader.

James Welsh, 9, of 2212 Randolph st. ne., a 4-B man from Burroughs who wants to be a doctor when he grows up, was the first contestant before the microphone. Queried by Quizmaster Vern Hansen as to who invented the telephone, Welsh remembered "Bell" readily enough; though he couldn't recall the rest of it, "Alexander Graham," the last name was enough to win his 100 points.

Eric Anderson, 9, of 1709 Douglas st. ne., a 4-A grader from Langdon who is sometimes bothered by a baby brother, was the first member of the opposing team before the "mike." Anderson also delivered his points when he shot out "Betsy Ross" when asked who is credited with making the first American flag.

Among Burroughs' perfect scorers was Rodger Allan Cliff, 9, 4-A, who has a duck named "Quacker" that prefers begonia plants for its diet. Cliff correctly named the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution as the two most precious documents preserved at the Library of Congress, and "maize" as another name for corn.

Other members of the Burroughs aggregation were Harris Rabinovich, 10, 5-B, of 4200 Russell ave., Mount Rainier; Jimmy Early, 11, 6-A, of 1404 Lawrence st. ne.; John E. Nylund, jr., 10, 5-B, of 1724 Irving st. ne., and Frank H. Gibson, 11, 6-A, of 1800 Irving st. ne.

The Woodridge trio in the Langdon-Woodridge squad included Raymond B. Weiss, of 3223 Vista st. ne., 9, a fourth year man; Frank Clarkson, 10, 5-A, of 2824 Myrtle ave. ne., and Kenneth Valdes, 11, 6-A, of 2846 Myrtle ave. ne. Between them the three accounted for a little over half of the team's 1000 points.

Judges for yesterday's quizdown were Miss Effie B. Handy and Mrs. Margaret T. Peckham of Parkview School, and Mrs. Louise Hewston of Seaton School. The program originated at Wilson Teachers College.

George Berry, Union Chief And Former Senator, Dies

Pressmen's Home, Tenn., Dec. 4 (Spl).—George L. Berry, president of the International Printing Pressmen's Union (AFL), died at his home today. He was 66.

Death, reported due to a digestive disorder, followed a four-day illness.

Although he was born in a log cabin, orphaned at 6 and never attended school a day in his life, Mr. Berry played important roles in American labor and politics in the past four decades.

The soft-spoken, religious, union leader, who established an unparalleled record for labor peace in the printing industry, lacked only three votes of winning the Democratic nomination for Vice President in 1924.

In the first Administration of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, he served as assistant administrator of the National Recovery Administration. In 1937 he was named to the United States Senate by Tennessee's Governor, Gordon Browning, when Senator Nathan L. Bachman died, and he became labor's direct spokesman in that body.

GEORGE L. BERRY
As he addressed Labor's Non-partisan League convention in Washington in March, 1937

Built Large Fortune

His close ties with the New Deal parted the following year, however, when the Roosevelt Administration and the Crump Democratic machine in Tennessee turned him down for renomination and he lost a primary fight to A. Tom Stewart.

Mr. Berry, who was said to have built a personal fortune in excess of a million dollars, was proud of the welfare system built up by his union under his guidance and of the Pressmen's Home development erected on 2600 acres of mountain land near his Hawkins County (Tenn.) birthplace, which he donated.

A million-dollar technical trade school building was opened at the home just three months ago and Mr. Berry told 2000 delegates and visitors at a union convention there that the union's policy of avoiding strikes had made the addition possible.

Mr. Berry acquired a newspaper, the Rogersville Review, and established the International Playing Card and Label Co. The plant printed cigarette packages, playing cards and labels.

Moonshiners Killed Father

Mr. Barry's father was killed by moonshiners while he was serving as a deputy United States marshal. His mother had died previously. He took his first newspaper job, as newsboy and roustabout, with the Jackson, Miss., Daily News.

For five years he ate and slept in the pressroom, learned his trade and taught himself to read and write.

"I was 16 years of age before I could read or write," he said later. From Jackson he went to St. Louis, to Nebraska City, Nebr., Denver and San Francisco as a pressman, then to Nevada's gold fields and back to San Francisco, where at 25 he was elected president of his union.

He had joined the Pressman's Union in 1899 and became its president in 1907.

He served in the Spanish-American War as a private. He was a member of a commission sent abroad by President Wilson in 1918 to coordinate industrial activity of the United States with that of its allies.

He served in France as an Army engineer.

Helped Found Legion

After the Armistice, President Wilson named Mr. Berry liaison officer with labor of the world. While in Paris he helped found the American Legion.

Under President Roosevelt, Mr. Berry served as coordinator for industrial cooperation and was a member of the President's board for allotting $4,800,000,000 of public works money, the Social Security Board, the first National Labor Board and other agencies.

Shortly after his appointment as Senator in 1937, Mr. Berry lost out in a suit for compensation for lands taken by the Tennessee Valley Authority in the Norris Dam area. He and his associates had valued marble quarry holdings in the tract at more than five million dollars, but a Federal commission held them to be worthless.

Although he had retired from politics, he participated in labor's fight on the Taft-Hartley Act in the recent campaign.

Last year he was fined $10,000 on uncontested charges of Federal income tax evasion in 1939, 1940 and 1941.

He s survived by his wife, Mrs. Marie Gehres Berry, and a sister, Mrs. Bonnie Price.

Funeral services will be held in Memorial Chapel here Wednesday afternoon, and burial will be at Pressmen's Home.

Ballistics Report To Determine Who Killed Ex-Convict

A ballistics report from the FBI Monday will determine which of two policemen killed Robert S. Wilkerson, 34, former convict and "cop-hater," in a gun battle Thursday night at 1601 Montello ave. ne.

One of the policeman was Corp. Grady A. Beacham, 40, who was killed by a blast from Wilkerson's shotgun, but managed to fire two shots either as he fell or a split second before Wilkerson fired.

Pvt. Harvey C. Womble may have fired the shot that killed Wilkerson. He was behind Beacham and emptied his revolver at Wilkerson.

The inquest into the deaths of Beacham and Wilkerson will be resumed Tuesday at 11:30 a. m.

Bethesda Man Found in Car; Ruled Suicide

John Henry Barron, 48, radio engineer with offices in the Warner Building, 501 13th st. nw., was found dead by his wife yesterday, in the garage annex of his home, 907 Goldsboro rd., Bethesda, Md.

A certificate of suicide was issued by Dr. F. J. Broschart, Montgomery County medical examiner. Barron was seated in his car in the garage when found by his wife, Mrs. Ruth Barron, who interrupted a trip South to return to Washington when she received no answer to telephone calls from Richmond, Va.

Montgomery County police said the garage was sealed, the ignition key was turned on, the gasoline tank was empty and a screw driver was found near the raised hood of the car, which they believed indicated he had set the carburetor for a richer mixture to increase carbon monoxide gas fumes.

Mrs. Barron had started at 3 p. m. Friday on a trip to Florida and called her husband at 7:30 p. m. from Richmond. Receiving no answer, she called again at 7:30 a. m. yesterday and became alarmed when she received no answer. Mrs. Barron is the sole survivor, police said.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. Monday at the W. Reuben Pumphrey funeral home, Bethesda. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

U. S. Urged to Pay In Lieu of Taxes

The National Institute of Municipal Law Officers yesterday urged Congress to reimburse local communities for tax exemption losses sustained because of military and other Federal installations.

The group offered its assistance in a national civil defense plan, but urged that such a plan should preserve civil rights and recognize "the proper sphere of action of local government."

Vernon E. West, District Corporation Counsel, was elected treasurer of the NIMLO as it concluded its 13th annual conference, held at the Mayflower Hotel during the past three days.

The institute's membership consists of the law officers of 518 cities, towns and counties throughout the Nation. More than 200 attended the conference.

Cite Local Services Given

The resolution on tax losses asserted that the existing tax exemption enjoyed by the Federal Government in the use of land for military and port installations, postoffices, courthouses and other Federal buildings "places an extremely heavy burden upon local governments, which are thereby deprived of taxes." Fire, police and other protection was still provided by the municipality, it was noted.

In the civil defense resolution, the law officers said legislation "should not impose the will of a State official upon municipalities to the extent that local responsibility in civil defense matters cannot be effectively discharged." The civil defense plan, they added, should be on a "purely voluntary" basis and should "preserve civil rights."

Alexander G. Brown of Portland, Oreg., was elected president to succeed Miss Anne X. Alpern, Pittsburgh city solicitor.

Robert D. Morrison, Lynchburg (Va.) city attorney, outgoing treasurer, was elected first vice president, while the new second vice president is Thomas L. Parsonnet, corporation counsel for Newark, N. J.

Urges Congressional Action

The institute urged the Eighty-first Congress to adopt legislation "confirming" the title to land lying beneath tidal and navigable waters in the States and their political subdivisions. The resolution to this effect stemmed from the Supreme Court decision in the California tidelands oil case, which placed control of such lands in the Federal Government.

The institute urged, by resolution, continued appropriations for air traffic control by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and reiterated its strong support of housing legislation similar to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. A survey of air pollution in the United States was urged.

Berserk Father Kills Baby Son, Stabs 4 Others

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Police said a young father went berserk today stomped his baby son to death, picked up his 6-week-old daughter and flung her ball-like against a wall then brutally cut up his estranged wife and her parents.

Dead is Paul Raymond Jensen, 18 months. In Harbor General Hospital not expected to live is Jenean Jensen, 6 weeks. She also was stabbed, police said, and picked up out of her crib and hurled against a wall.

The babies' mother, Mrs. Helen Jensen, 31, also was in the hospital with face and chest stab wounds as were her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bodner. All are in critical condition.

Mrs. Jensen and her husband were recently estranged. Today, he came to their house and the violent quarrel took place. Jensen fled.

Traffic Snarls Averted Despite Huge Crowds

Though record crowds of Christmas shoppers turned out yesterday, according to department store estimates, a dozen extra policemen assigned to downtown intersections kept traffic moving steadily through the area.

Police, who said both pedestrian and motor traffic were heavier than last Saturday, reported only one bad tieup. A minor accident at 13th st. and New York ave. nw. blocked traffic for 5 to 10 minutes about 4:45 p. m. and lined up streetcars for a block and a half on New York ave.

The Capital Transit Co., which ran 65 extra streetcars and 52 additional buses, said there was "no more delays than usual" due to traffic.

Downtown parking lots reported business booming, and a spokesman for the "fringe" parking lot at 4th st. and Constitution ave. nw. called business there "the biggest ever known on this lot." He said nearly 1000 cars were parked during the day in the "fringe" area, connected by special buses to the shopping section.

Numerous citizens solved their parking problems by leaving autos in illegal areas, and police tripled the number of parking tickets they distributed the previous Saturday. They gave out 115 tickets yesterday up to 4:30 p.m., compared to 40 the Saturday before.

Czech Envoy Appeals For Release of Goods

Czech Ambassador Vladimir Outrata yesterday appealed to Undersecretary of State Lovett to permit delivery to his country of approximately 17 million dollars in American machinery and equipment.

D. C. Facing Water Crisis, Young Warns

Washington may have to go off the "pay-as-you-go" standard to finance more than just schools.

This was pointed out yesterday by Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, District Engineer Commissioner, who predicted the District may have to borrow money to bolster its water supply system, now "quite overloaded," which will be "dangerously strained" by fiscal year 1951.

"We simply cannot do what needs to be done with the water supply with the margin of receipts from the water fund and the present water rate," said General Young. "Operating costs, as well as all other costs, are up so high that by fiscal year 1951, we can't pay for the necessary improvements on a pay-as-you-go basis."

General Young suggested a loan, an increase in water rates, or a combination of these two methods might have to be used to raise the necessary additional revenue.

The Engineer Commissioner said he would report to the District Commissioners within 10 days on proposals from Water Department Superintendent David A. Auld and the District Army Engineer's office on the District water supply.

Proposed is spending between 15 million dollars and 20 million dollars between fiscal year 1951 and 1955, to extend and modernize every water department function. General Young said he had not yet decided whether he would recommend the full sum to the Commissioners.

One problem the District must solve is consumption of water by the Federal Government here. General Young said last year was the first time the Federal Government had reimbursed the District for its use of water here. A flat sum of one million dollars was what Congress decided was the Federal share. General Young said yesterday he thinks the Federal Government should pay for what it uses, since there is at present no provision for an increase in the payment if consumption increases.

U. S. Urged to Pay In Lieu of Taxes

The National Institute of Municipal Law Officers yesterday urged Congress to reimburse local communities for tax exemption losses sustained because of military and other Federal installations.

The group offered its assistance in a national civil defense plan, but urged that such a plan should preserve civil rights and West recognize "the proper sphere of action of local government."

Vernon E. West, District Corporation Counsel, was elected treasurer of the NIMLO as it concluded its 13th annual conference, held at the Mayflower Hotel during the past three days.

The institute's membership consists of the law officers of 518 cities, towns and counties throughout the Nation. More than 200 attended the conference.

Cite Local Services Given

The resolution on tax losses asserted that the existing tax exemption enjoyed by the Federal Government in the use of land for military and port installations, postoffices, courthouses and other Federal buildings "places an extremely heavy burden upon local governments, which are thereby deprived of taxes." Fire, police and other protection was still provided by the municipality, it was noted.

In the civil defense resolution, the law officers said legislation "should not impose the will of a State official upon municipalities to the extent that local responsibility in civil defense matters cannot be effectively discharged." The civil defense plan, they added, should be on a "purely voluntary" basis and should "preserve civil rights."

Alexander G. Brown of Portland, Oreg., was elected president to succeed Miss Anne X. Alpern, Pittsburgh city solicitor.

Robert D. Morrison, Lynchburg (Va.) city attorney, outgoing treasurer, was elected first vice president, while the new second vice president is Thomas L. Parsonnet, corporation counsel for Newark, N. J.

Urges Congressional Action

The institute urged the Eighty-first Congress to adopt legislation "confirming" the title to land lying beneath tidal and navigable waters in the States and their political subdivisions. The resolution to this effect stemmed from the Supreme Court decision in the California tidelands oil case, which placed control of such lands in the Federal Government.

The institute urged, by resolution, continued appropriations for air traffic control by the Civil Aeronautics Administration, and reiterated its strong support of housing legislation similar to the Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill. A survey of air pollution in the United States was urged.

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Police said a young father went berserk today stomped his baby son to death, picked up his 6-week-old daughter and flung her ball-like against a wall then brutally cut up his estranged wife and her parents.

Dead is Paul Raymond Jensen, 18 months. In Harbor General Hospital not expected to live is Jenean Jensen, 6 weeks. She also was stabbed, police said, and picked up out of her crib and hurled against a wall.

The babies' mother, Mrs. Helen Jensen, 31, also was in the hospital with face and chest stab wounds as were her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Bodner. All are in critical condition.

Mrs. Jensen and her husband were recently estranged. Today, he came to their house and the violent quarrel took place. Jensen fled.

Traffic Snarls Averted Despite Huge Crowds

Though record crowds of Christmas shoppers turned out yesterday, according to department store estimates, a dozen extra policemen assigned to downtown intersections kept traffic moving steadily through the area.

Police, who said both pedestrian and motor traffic were heavier than last Saturday, reported only one bad tieup. A minor accident at 13th st. and New York ave. nw. blocked traffic for 5 to 10 minutes about 4:45 p. m. and lined up streetcars for a block and a half on New York ave.

The Capital Transit Co., which ran 65 extra streetcars and 52 additional buses, said there was "no more delays than usual" due to traffic.

Downtown parking lots reported business booming, and a spokesman for the "fringe" parking lot at 4th st. and Constitution ave. nw. called business there "the biggest ever known on this lot." He said nearly 1000 cars were parked during the day in the "fringe" area, connected by special buses to the shopping section.

Numerous citizens solved their parking problems by leaving autos in illegal areas, and police tripled the number of parking tickets they distributed the previous Saturday. They gave out 115 tickets yesterday up to 4:30 p.m., compared to 40 the Saturday before.

Young Truitt to Represent U. S. on Yule Broadcast

Alben Barkley Truitt, grandson and namesake of the Vice President-elect, will represent children of the United States on the fourteenth International Children's Christmas Broadcast Sunday, December 19.

The annual program, sponsored by the Greater National Capital Committee of the Board of Trade, will originate at the Shoreham Hotel.

Young Truitt, a student at St. Albans School, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Max O'Rell Truitt. Mrs. Truitt is the daughter of Barkley.

The program will be both broadcast and televised from 5 to 5:30 p. m. The broadcast will be carried by WMAL and the ABC network. WMAL-TV and the East Coast television network of CBS will televise the program.

Children from nearly every embassy and legation in Washington will take part in the program, appearing in costumes of their native countries.

Dour Predictions for 1949 Discounted

Nineteen-forty-nine is beginning early. And dourly. Already it is ticketed as the year of recession—and no fooling this time!

Howard T. Lewis, professor of marketing at Harvard, feels that "business is not fundamentally sound." A colleague, Joseph L. Snider, who teaches business economics at Harvard, argues that inflation has about run its course and a downturn is on the way.

Livingston

The National Association of Purchasing Agents, comprising men experienced in keeping their ears to markets, concludes that "production will fall off during December and possibly January and back orders will decline." Sidney Fish, a reporter for the New York Journal of Commerce, confirmed this with an on-the-spot check at the annual meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers in New York. He found that "irregular reductions in output" had begun.

Statistics help the case. Department store sales, for four successive weeks, have run below a year ago, yet up to election they had been running above last year. The Department of Agriculture estimates that 1949 net farm income will slip 10 per cent under this year's $16,500,000,000, which in turn is 7 per cent below 1947. Installment credit increased only 30 million dollars in October as against 184 million dollars in September.

New Curbs Are Factor

Here the new regulations, which took effect September 20, were undoubtedly an influence—augmenting the September total and detracting from October. Layoffs persist in the clothing, textile, and shoe industries, though (overall non-farm employment in October reached a new high). And prices of agricultural products continue to show downward tendencies.

Department store ads in newspapers mirror the state of the economy. Price competition is in full swing. Markdowns and special offers once again woo customers. Shelves are fairly full of merchandise. And manufacturers and merchants are pressing for sales. The shopper has regained the prewar franchise of being able to pick, choose, and say to the sales clerk, "No, I think I'll try elsewhere."

The underlying apprehension now is that current consumption cannot keep pace with production; that goods will tumble on the market for sale; that prices will break, and that 1920-21 will happen anew. Professor Snider points out that in 1920, once prices started to skid and national income to fall, pent-up demand rapidly evaporated.

Not Yet Sure of IT

I'm not willing to commit myself to 1949 as IT. December sales should tell if consumers won't buy. I still think it's possible to continue our sector-by-sector readjustment—as in furs, radios, comic books, jewelry, nightclubs, restaurants, the theater, men's suits—without a violent downturn. I still think the dominant influence in business—an influence that did not exist in the 'twenties—is the United States Government. Today Federal expenditures run to 40 billion dollars—20 per cent of the national income. Such outlays create employment, prop purchasing power. And they're apt to increase rather than decrease.

The developments in Berlin—the establishment of a Communist government in the Soviet-controlled area—hardly suggest that President Truman will be able to hold military expenditures to 15 billions a year. In addition, the President is committed to social undertakings which cost money—housing, medical aid and social security expansion. In 1920, Government expenditures, at about six billion, constituted less than 8 per cent of the national income and were declining rapidly. Indeed, the post-Armistice decline in business coincided with the drop in United States spending.

Further, State and local government expenditures are due to rise. On his return to his desk in Albany, Governor Dewey announced plans for expansion of New York State's highway, hospital, and educational systems beyond the State's postwar reconstruction budget. State and local government outlays may easily fill in the gap if corporations curb plant expansion.

Figures on Real Income

A notable redistribution of buying power has taken place since 1929. This also affects the business outlook. Wage earners are getting an increased share of the Nation's goods and services. On the other hand, corporations—despite all-time-high dollar profits of 20 billions—are getting a decreased share of real income—as the following table shows:

Year	Per Cent of "Real" National Income: Wages and Salaries	Profits
1948	62.1	8.8

Here's the explanation: Since 1929, wages and salaries have gone up 160 per cent, profits somewhat less—140 per cent. But the cost of living (what the wage earner buys) has gone up 40 per cent, whereas commodity prices (what the corporation buys) have advanced somewhat more—70 per cent. This may well throw light on the action of the stock market—on the difficulty of selling new issues of common stock. The record suggests (see chart) that the corporation has passed its heyday. It's losing out in the race for real income—real economic power.

'Black Magic'
Carriers Use New Safety Methods

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Railroads are using "black magic" for quick inspection methods to keep their trains safe, the American Society of Mechanical Engineers was told.

Increasing use of fluorescent liquid and black light was reported to have produced techniques four to five times faster than any "dry" method of inspection.

Ray McBrian, engineer of standards and research of the Denver & Rio Grande Western Railroad, said at a symposium that a complete inspection of the axle could be made in two to two and a half minutes. A check of the wheel-seat and journal takes only 90 seconds.

Describing the methods, he said: "Fluorescent liquids of high penetrating power are used as a bath for soaking non-magnetic materials; the surface penetrant is removed and the material is examined under black light."

If defects are present, the fluorescent liquid remains in the cracks and glows under the black light.

"For magnetic materials," McBrain said, "a special magnaflow paste is mixed with a suitable oil to form a suspension of fluorescent ferro magnetic particles."

Breaks or defects, he pointed out, cause interruptions of the magnetic field, and some of the magnetic flux crowds outside the affected area.

Lloyd B. Jones, Paoli, Pa., consulting engineer said the basis for magnetic particle inspection is the fact that any foreign matter imbedded in steel will tend to produce the same effects as a break or crack.

Use of ultrasonic vibrations ranging between half a million and five million cycles per second, to locate internal and surface flaws in a wide variety of materials, was described by Daniel E. Farmer, Sperry Products electrical engineering supervisor.

Yuletide Bonuses Announced by Varied Employers

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The first trickle of what employes hoped would become a flood of Christmas or year-end bonuses appeared this week.

Guaranty Trust Co. of New York announced that all its employes in the United States except officers would receive Christmas bonuses ranging from 10 to 13 per cent of their base earnings for the year.

Employes who have worked full time since last New Year's at Grand Union Co. and who are not on a profiet-sharing plan will be paid an extra week's salary.

Commercial National Bank & Trust Co. already has paid its clerical staff a bonus of 5 per cent of their 1948 salaries.

And clerical workers of Reynolds & Co., a member of the New York Stock Exchange, are receiving a holiday bonus of 1½ month's salary based on length of service.

General Aniline & Film Corp. planned to disburse bonuses to 9400 workers with six months or more service. The extras will range from 3 per cent to the yearly base pay for those of five years or more employment to 1 per cent for those with less than one year.

Inland Steel Approves Plant Enlargement

Inland Steel Co. has approved plans for enlarging its overall steel capacity and its facilities for producing tin mill products, according to Wilfred Sykes, president.

Sykes stated that certain portions of the programs being initiated are now under way, and added that while some benefit might be had late in 1949, the major benefits in both programs will be realized in 1950 and 1951. He said that, although they do not involve any additional furnaces or mills, the programs are quite extensive.

He estimated that when the program is completed the company's ingot capacity would be increased by from 15 to 20 per cent. The present ingot capacity is 3,400,000 tons a year.

Lumber Shipments

Lumber shipments of 409 mills reporting to the National Lumber Trade Barometer were 9.4 per cent below production for the week ending November 27. In the same week new orders of these mills were 14.4 per cent below production. Unfilled order files of the reporting mills amount to 29 per cent of stocks.

Emergency Freight Increase Opposed by Agriculture Dept.

The Agriculture Department acted yesterday to oppose a requested 8 per cent emergency freight rate increase for railroads.

It filed a motion asking the Interstate Commerce Commission to deny the increase. The action came as railroad representatives completed their testimony at a hearing on their plea for rate boosts.

The ICC next will hear shippers' opposing the plan. Final arguments are set for Wednesday.

The railroads have asked the emergency raise pending ICC determination of their request for a permanent 13 per cent boost in freight charges.

The Agriculture Department said in its motion that "no national emergency in transportation exists requiring further immediate general ncreases in freight rates."

The motion stated that under present conditions, even if railway employes should be given 10 cents an hour pay increases, the carriers will average a return in 1949 of 4 per cent on the value of their properties after payment of all taxes.

The department contends the average level of railroad freight rates has increased more than 44 per cent since June 30, 1946.

Hearings Will Begin Monday In Probe of Business Profits

By The Associated Press

The record-breaking profits of business go under a Congressional X-ray this week.

A joint committee composed of Senate and House members will undertake the study.

Their analysis of the business picture is expected to have an important bearing on what the new Congress does in the fields of taxation, money controls, price fixing and rationing.

Economists, accountants, labor leaders and industrial heads will begin testifying Monday at public hearings by a subcommittee of the joint committee on the President's economic report.

The subcommittee is headed by Senator Flanders (R., Vt.)

Another member of the economic committee, Senator O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.) is urging an excess profits tax on corporations to provide added Federal revenue "essential to wage the struggle for peace."

O'Mahoney said that corporation profits now are at an all-time peak with the biggest share going to the laargest corporations.

The Senator said he expects the public hearings to prove that taxes are necessary on these "giant corporations" in order to help small business survive.

O'Mahoney has proposed an excess profits tax that would exempt the first $50,000 or $100,000 in profits of small business concerns.

Last year corporate profits after taxes reached the record high of about 17 billion dollars. This year's profits are expected to go higher. The last official report of the Department of Commerce, as of June 30, showed business this year making profits at the rate of $20,400,000,000 after taxes.

President Truman, by inference, assured business last week that it has nothing to fear from his Administration.

Nevertheless there is increasing talk that taxes must be raised—with some of business' profits being skimmed off in higher regular taxes or by some form of excess profits tax.

Senator Flanders said economists, and labor and industry spokesmen will be questioned.

Gizycka Counsel Opposes Early Trial

Mrs. Felicia Gizycka's attorneys yesterday opposed an early trial date for the case to settle the disputed will of the late Eleanor M. Patterson, publisher of the Washington Times-Herald.

In memoranda filed in District Court, Mrs. Gizycka, daughter of Mrs. Patterson, declared that no date prior to January 31, 1949, would be suitable for the trial.

At stake in the case is disposition of more than $16,500,000, including the newspaper. Mrs. Gizycka was bequeathed $25,000 a year and certain properties. If the will is broken, she may inherit the entire estate.

In opposing an early trial date, Mrs. Gizycka declared that "the litigation has been a matter of public interest . . . Wittingly or unwittingly, the caveatees have attempted to create the impression that the caveat was filed for the purposes of harassing the caveatees, delaying the administration of the estate and incurring needless costs. Nothing could be further from the truth."

In asking for more time to examine the evidence, Mrs. Gizycka said that under management of the court-approved Riggs National Bank, the Times-Herald between July 25 and October 30 showed a surplus of $233,990.

She accused the executors of the estate of failing to "assemble all relevant and material facts" so that Mrs. Gizycka could have the benefit of existing evidence.

WINGED CARRIERS—After delivering to Washington children a United States Savings Bond message, which they flew from New York City, carrier pigeons owned by William R. Pennington of 3226 4th st. se., are released to return to the Pennington lofts. The birds started from New York Friday, but rain and head-winds along the 215-mile route forced all but one down. They arrived early yesterday, however, in time for ceremony on the steps of the Treasury. Said the message, signed by the school children of New York: "We girls and boys in New York buy saving stamps and turn them in for U. S. Saving Bonds. Our parents buy bonds. We know your parents do too. And that you buy stamps. Let's all keep it up. That's good for us and for the country"

U. S. Execution Stays 'Horrify' British Visitor

A British justice official said yesterday that he was "horrified" to learn that in Washington extended delays in execution are given condemned criminals.

This was the view of Philip Allen, assistant secretary in charge of the criminal division of the British Home Office. Allen is in this country to study justice proceedings under a commonwealth fellowship.

He was interviewed at District Court after he had conferred with judges and prosecutors.

Allen said that in England about seven weeks at the most elapse between the time a man is convicted of a capital crime and the date of his execution.

In Washington, he said, he learned that it takes 24 months or more before the judicial and administrative remedies are exhausted and a criminal can be executed.

"It horrified me to learn that a man must wait all these months not knowing whether he is to live or die," Allen said.

In Britain, he said, the appeals in the case of condemned criminals are hastily disposed of, as are petitions for executive clemency.

17 Zone Pleas To Be Heard at Silver Spring

Recommendation that six pending Montgomery County zoning applications be aproved and 11 denied was announced yesterday by the Maryland - National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

All 17 petitions have been set for public hearings December 14 at the Liquor Control Board Building in Silver Spring. This will be the first zoning hearings held by the county commissioners in their new capacity as the county council ad interim under the recently adopted county charter government.

To Commercial D

Four of the petitions recommended for approval are for changes from residential A to commercial D. They are: Petition A-548, lots 1 to 3, block 1, Meadowood subdivision, asked by Willam B. Wheeler, agent for Lacy Shaw, owner, hearing at 3:10 p. m.; A-557, for rear portion of block B, Hickerson's subdivision Wheaton, asked by Maryland Real Estate Co., owner, hearing 4:50 p. m.; A-567, 220,500 square feet of land on west side of Rockville pike on the front of Congressional Airport, Halpine, asked by Arthur C. Hyde, owner, hearing 11 a. m. at Rockville; A-555, asking 2.7 acres at se. intersection of Sitka Church rd. and New Hampshire ave., Hillandale, asked by Charles Sheffres, owner, hearng, 4:30 p. m.

For Apartment Zoning

The two others approved were for apartment zoning. They were: Petition A-556, for lots 1, 23, 24, 25, block Q, lots 1 to 26, block T, lots 1 to 12, block U, 11 to 26, block S, New Hampshire Estates, University lane and Carroll ave., asked by Esther Milstead, owner, hearing at 4:40 p. m., A-563, 3.46 acres on the east side of Manchester rd. between Caroline and Wayne aves., Silver Spring, asked by William B. Wheeler, agent for Georgia Avenue Properties, Inc., owner, hearing 5:30 p. m.

Recommendation Overridden

The planning commission overrode the recommendation of the planning staff for two-family dwelling zoning for 570.63 acres in Montgomery Highland Estates on the north side of Viers Mill rd., 1¾ miles north of Wheaton, asked by A. S. Kay, agent for Wheaton Estates, Inc., for which a hearing is set at 3:30 p. m.

The commission members adopted a resolution proposed by Col. E. Brooke Lee, vice chairman, that 70 acres be approved for two-family dwellings with the announced intention of making it possible for veterans to obtain "better homes" at a cost of $9000. Remainder of the tract was recommended denied.

Police Hunt Rape Suspect

Sex squad detectives and park police yesterday pressed their search for a rapist believed to have assaulted a 14-year-old girl and a 34-year-old woman during the past week.

The woman was raped Wednesday night in Rock Creek Park and the girl two nights later at the Banneker Recreation Center Playground, Georgia ave. and Euclid st. nw.

The descriptions of the rapist were similar: a dark-skinned Negro of about 35, weighing about 150, 5 feet 6, wearing a brown felt hat, brown leather jacket, Army olive drab woolen trousers and paratrooper's boots and armed with a pistol.

The girl told police she and a girl companion were at a drinking fountain in the playground at about 6:30 p. m. Friday when the man approached, shoved a pistol in her side and then raped her twice. Police said the other girl was not harmed.

Police believe he is the same man who assaulted a Navy Department employe shortly after 8 p. m. Wednesday in Rock Creek Park at the rear of Francis Junior High School.

Fair Trade Group Organized By 8 Pontiac Dealers Here

Organized more than a year ago to promote sound trade practice, eight Pontiac automobile dealers in the Washington area now have incorporated as the Washington Metropolitan Pontiac Dealers Association.

The association received a charter Friday from the Virginia State Corporation Commission to carry out a five-point program as follows: 1, analyze the financial structure of the automobile business in and around the District of Columbia; 2, promote a program of building and maintaining good roads; 3, foster the highest standard of integrity and commercial uses among the membership; 4, promote the arbitration of disputes, and, 5, provide and exchange credit information.

Association officers, according to C. F. Devereaux, zone manager, Pontiac Division, General Motors Corp., are E. M. Kupersmidt, Coast-In-Pontiac, 407 Florida ave. ne., president; H. J. Brown, Brown-Pontiac, Arlington, vice president; Jack J. Blank, Arcade-Pontiac, 1437 Irving st. nw., secretary-treasurer.

"No Pontiac dealer has yet been called before the House subcommittee investigating questionable automobile practices," Devereaux said yesterday. "We realized more than a year ago the present situation was brewing, and we have been meeting monthly ever since to discuss problems arising in the selling and servicing of new cars, and to settle them to the satsfaction of buyers and sellers alike. Since long before this investigation started, Pontiac dealers' emphasis has been on future business, not the benefits of today."

Film Baron Mayer Weds Ex-Chorine

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Mrs. Lorena Danker and Louis Mayer at Ciro's

Hollywood, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Chief Louis B. Mayer and a former movie chorus girl ducked out of town today, got married and were honeymooning in Palm Springs.

Mayer, a grandpa at 63, eloped to Yuma, Ariz., with fortyish Mrs. Lorena Danker, beautiful widow of a friend of his, who used to dance in film musicals of the 1930s.

The Russian-born former junkman, who became boss of Hollywood's biggest film factory and drew the Nation's biggest salary, got super-colossal secrecy throughout the proceedings. His press agent drove off photographers, his MGM police chief fended off reporters with the help of the local sheriff, and the sheriff himself chauffered the movie baron around town.

The couple arrived in Yuma early today, trailed by a junior-grade motorcade of her 11-year-old daughter, his head press agent and the head man of his private police force.

Sheriff J. A. Beard obligingly cruised the bride and multimillionaire bridegroom around in his car to keep away nosy reporters.

Court Clerk Willard Daniel scribbled out the marriage license in the back seat of the sheriff's car. Then they all sped to the jail a block away where Justice of the Peace B. H. Lutes rattled off the ceremony in two minutes flat. The couple got out of the car for the ceremony.

The hatless bride had a fur coat draped over her tailored suit and Mayer, who paid $3,250,000 in divorcing his last wife in 1947, wore a dark blue suit.

The movie mogul kissed his bride and they dashed out a back door with the sheriff. At Winterhaven, a mile away, everybody got out and switched cars to confuse the inquiring press.

As Lorena Layson, the bride was a shapely line girl in Hollywood's first extravaganza musicals.

In 1934 she married Danny Danker, a pal of Mayer's. Danker died after a heart attack four years ago.

Toys in Stores Here Once More at Their Pre-War Peaks

By Judith Spivak
Post Reporter

Santa Claus is going to have a mighty well-stuffed pack this Christmas, judging from the loaded toy counters of Washington's stores.

There haven't been so many toys—in so many varieties—since pre-war days, department store buyers and wholesalers agree.

Toy prices, though not exempt from inflation, have risen an average of less than 5 per cent since last year, one wholsaler estimated. Only exception is wheel goods, with bikes, wagons and scooters, all on the scarce side, up an average of 5 to 10 per cent due to the increased cost of steel.

More medium-priced goods are on the market this year, compared to last year's high percentage of high quality, high priced toys, several buyers noted. And a few items—like rubber dolls and some games—have dropped in cost.

Washington stores are crowded with such gimmicks in the realm of playthings as a phonograph that looks like a juke box ($30), a child-sized vacuum cleaner that really works ($9), and a sub-machine gun that blasts the enemy with ping pong balls ($3).

For electric train fanciers, ingenious manufacturers have developed the "talking" station, which bellows "New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and all points West . . . all abooard!" when a train halts at its platform ($15).

A walking metal robot, two feet tall with light bulb eyes, can be turned out by any clever lad with a new and bigger-than-ever Erector set ($50).

Young ladies can take their pick this Christmas of dolls that not only coo, drink, and wet, but burp as well.

There is a Socket-Rocket, which makes a good deal of harmless noise for 15 cents, and a kit for making pottery that can be baked in a regular oven ($1).

A plastic steering wheel for junior drivers, is attached to the auto dashboard by a suction cup ($2), and a model firehouse has tiny trucks that squirt real water on a "burning" house ($5).

But though gift-buying parents may fall for the foregoing fancy trimmings, department store Santas report that youngsters vote overwhelmingly for the old stand-bys—dolls, bikes and electric trains.

Little boys pick guns, cowboy outfits and fire engines as close seconds to trains and bicycles, they say, and a lot of small girls want a doll carriage after that doll comes through.

Quite a few young ladies want trains, the Santas say, and at least 1 per cent of the younger boys admit a hankering for a doll.

One Santa claims he got eight requests for baby brothers and one plea for a dog instead of a baby brother.

Man Bites Dog

If the old newspaper adage holds true, Mr. John Foster Dulles' optimistic broadcast on the achievements of the Paris Assembly session merited banner headlines. The assembly, said Mr. Dulles, has "increased the chances of peace," and he cited some of its accomplishments in support of what was really a cautious and not a sensational expression of hope.

The core of Mr. Dulles' optimism lies in his statement that "It has been made plain that any nation that launched an attack would find itself at once opposed by most of the world." This is another way of pointing out that on critical issues the Assembly has divided with near-uniformity, the Soviet bloc on one side and "most of the world" on the other. In enough instances to be noteworthy the vote has been 47 to 6.

It was Mr. Dulles himself who coined the phrase "not war, not peace," to describe the state of unquiet international relationship in which we live. And what he now sees is probably an increase in the chances of no war. The congealing of the two-world alignment in the United Nations, bitterly unreconciled on almost every issue, cannot be called peace. The division into two camps is open and complete and nothing that has happened in the Paris meeting points toward early bridging of the gap. In fact, developments in the Berlin situation have probably widened the cleavage.

Where, then, is Mr. Dulles' reason for optimism? In the undeniable fact that all nations know now, or should know, where the others stand. In itself this seems to us rather slight grounds for hope. In what it may lead to we see more encouraging possibilities. If the Assembly has demonstrated anything to Moscow, it is that the Kremlin's policies are rapidly alienating even those small European nations who would like to be at least "neutral."

NEP In Yugoslavia

For many months after his excommunication by the Cominform, Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia professed himself in all his public utterances a thoroughly orthodox Communist. Not he but the Kremlin, he insisted, had deviated from the true Marxist-Leninist paths. But the other day at Zagreb, where he addressed the congress of the Croatian Communist Party, Marshal Tito took occasion to renounce the principle of the proletarian dictatorship and to proclaim what appears to be a sort of Fabianism.

The question, you recall, which precipitated the breach between Tito and his former masters was that of the peasant proprietorships which form the basis of the Yugoslavian economy. Moscow had demanded an immediate and general liquidation of kulaks. Tito refused on the very reasonable ground that any attempt to enforce the liquidation at this time would produce a revolt of such proportions that his regime could not be expected to survive it.

In defending his course to the Croatian Communists, Tito demanded: Which is better; a frontal attack . . . or to show them that they must suffer defeat in the end and must therefore lay down their arms? This reference to arms is of especial interest, because it suggests that coercive measures against the peasants had actually been attempted, and then abandoned when they encountered something more than passive resistance. This in turn recalls all the rumors which have filtered out of Yugoslavia from time to time concerning bands of Chetniks said to be still operating in remoter areas of Serbia and Montenegro. Apparently the resistance is also following the usual device of hoarding crops, for Tito went on to reproach the peasants for not having provided enough produce to feed the industrial workers, and went on to threaten them with harsh punishments if this continued.

Nevertheless, the main purpose of his speech was to announce that the five-year plan, which had been patterned upon those of Soviet Russia, was to be drastically modified. The new attitude of Russia and her satellites, he explained, had made this necessary. Assistance from satellite countries in the way of imports for a program of industrialization have been cut off. The most important of these imports was the high-grade coke from Poland and Czechoslovakia which is necessary to the production of steel. In consequence, Tito has been obliged to make overtures to the Western powers in the hope of obtaining supplies of metallurgical coke from France or western Germany.

There is obviously some connection, then, between Tito's frankly acknowledged economic difficulties and his new Fabian policy, whereby the goals of socialism are to be sought through "education rather than by coercion," and, as he chose to put it, by "humanitarian" methods.

These concessions to democratic prejudices are probably as far as Marshal Tito dares go in seeking favors from the West and probably a great deal further than he would be willing to go if his own political and perhaps his physical head were not at stake. There is some reason to believe that his hand is being forced not only by economic necessity but by powerful members of his own entourage who have become Communists for purposes of practical politics rather than for ideological reasons—men who until recently were satisfied to give docile obedience to Russia in matters of foreign policy but have no intention of surrendering, if they can help it, either Yugoslavian independence or their own power.

From the beginning of the breach with Moscow, Tito has been obliged to choose between retaining the support of these men and abject submission to Moscow, without guarantee of mercy. Those who profess to know Marshal Tito will say it is impossible to consider him as other than a sincere and even bigoted Communist; but they also say he is a lover of luxury and power and hardly one to carry ideological fanaticism to the point of self-immolation.

Spy Documents

The latest chapter in the Whittaker Chambers story is so fantastic that many citizens may be inclined to write it off as a nightmare. We are told that microfilms which may contain evidence of treason or wholesale theft of confidential documents from the State and Navy Departments have been found in a "hollowed-out-pumpkin" on Mr. Chambers' Maryland farm. That detail alone seems to give the story the aura of a Halloween prank. But enough facts have already been disclosed along with the bizarre trimmings to suggest that documentary evidence of Communist access to secret Government files has at last been uncovered.

Of course, no conclusions can reasonably be drawn at this time. Rather it is a moment for asking questions, and the question that first hits a reader of the story in the face is this: How did these allegedly damning microfilms happen to be in a "hollowed-out pumpkin" on a Maryland farm many months after the charges to which they are related were laid bare?

Apparently the first indication that Mr. Chambers had documents tending to support his charge that a Communist spy ring had a pipe line into the State Department came at pretrial examination in the libel suit that Alger Hiss, former State Department official, has brought against Mr. Chambers. Mr. Bert Andrews has told the story in commendable detail in the New York Herald Tribune and The Washington Post. Asked for documentary proof of his charges, Mr. Chambers is said to have produced 60 documents of the utmost importance.

Learning of these documents, Representative Nixon of the House Committee on Un-American Activities sent the committee's chief investigator, Robert E. Stripling, to the Chambers farm with a subpena for any and all other pertinent documents that he might have. Mr. Chambers is then said to have yielded the microfilm on which is recorded highly confidential State and Navy Department documents, including a message from Ambassador Bullitt, the possession of which may have enabled the possessor to break the United States secret code.

If detailed examination of this microfilm substantiates the present reports as to its contents, its possession by an admitted former Communist is a matter of the utmost importance to our national security. Representative Mundt says in his statement that the existence of such films has been suspected for 10 years. Why, then, were not Whittaker Chambers' files and documents subpenaed months ago when the Chambers-Hiss controversy was at its height? Why has the Department of Justice, which was asked to prosecute either Mr. Hiss or Mr. Chambers for perpury, done nothing to uncover what may prove to be a major scandal directly bearing upon our national security?

It is almost unbelievable that material of this sort should turn up for the first time in connection with a civil suit when the legislative arm of the Government has been actively probing into the case and the executive arm was long ago alerted to the probability of dangerous leaks of confidential security information. Mr. Nixon undoubtedly deserves credit for belatedly bringing forth what the Committee on Un-American Activities should have had months ago. Even less can be said for the Department of Justice. If the subpenaed microfilm and the documents voluntarily offered by Mr. Chambers are as significant as they are represented to be, our investigators will be put in the position of having indulged in child's play.

Bid For Trouble

Mr. Eric Johnston's proposal that Congress vote a billion-dollar fund to guarantee American private investments in Europe against losses resulting from nationalization, expropriation or other forms of government seizure reportedly received a cool reception from Messrs. Hoffman and Harriman. Their reaction is not surprising, for the Johnston plan assumes that the United States Government would try to salvage these private investment interests by bringing pressure to bear upon erring governments to mend their ways or risk loss of ECA aid.

Thus the ECA would be put in the position of doing what its Communist foes would like it to do and charge that it aims to do—that is, dictate to the political heads of aided countries, thereby forfeiting the good will and confidence of the aided, which is so essential to successful functioning of the ECA. Furthermore, it seems highly inconsistent for a spokesman for private industry to advocate a plan that would shift risks of loss to the Government and at the same time give to private investors all the benefits of their nonexistent enterprise. Unless or until American private citizens are willing to assume the risks incidental to business operations in foreign countries—and in many parts of the world those risks are at present very great—the fight to preserve free institutions abroad through the upbuilding of industry cannot be greatly aided by private capital. Certainly the United States would be hampered, not helped, in carrying out its foreign policies by underwriting the losses of private undertakings.

Freedom And Fear

It must have taken immense personal courage for the Chilean delegate on the U. N. Assembly's Legal Committee to speak the truths he did on Thursday about the Soviet Union. Senor Cruz Ocampo's son and the son's Russian wife are behind the iron curtain. She cannot leave because the government will not let her, and young Cruz Ocampo elected to stay with her. Already, according to the father, the girl's life has been threatened for even asking to go with her husband. The lives of both of them are now certainly in danger because of the Chilean delegate's outspoken criticism. Nevertheless, as he said, "To maintain silence . . . would only serve to increase the power of tyranny and postpone the day when justice will take the place of arbitrary rule."

This case, of course, is not the only one of its kind. Quite a number of men assigned to duty in the Soviet Union during and since the war, Americans, British and other Allied nationals, have married Russian girls. Those who left early enough got their wives out with them. Of late the Soviet government has raised an absolute barrier to the departure of any of its nationals who have married foreigners.

"Are we seriously expected to believe," asked Cruz Ocampo, "that the security of the Soviet state is so unstable that it would be threatened if a few women left the country to go and live with their husbands?" The apparent answer is that whatever we may believe, the Soviet government itself believes it. Indeed, the best measure of a government's sense of insecurity is the extent to which it invokes the ikon of national security as an excuse for repressive regulations.

As the Chilean delegate correctly pointed out, this part of the iron curtain policy, indeed the whole iron curtain, is but an external reflection of internal policies. The fact that there are slave labor camps in the Soviet Union where millions of prisoners are incarcerated is itself an aspect of a broader truth. The entire country is a concentration camp for all but the party hierarchy. And even they are at the mercy of the secret police. There can be no freedom where fear dominates, and by this yard-stick the inhabitants of the Kremlin are assuredly the world's most frightened men.

Marriage Deflation

A bear market in romance seems to be developing, though you would never guess it from the brides' pictures that crowd the social columns. Nevertheless the Public Health Service reports a decline in marriage licenses issued in September in 72 major cities. Since that was the twenty-second consecutive month in which a decline was registered when compared with the corresponding month of the previous year, it looks as if the seven-year marriage boom were definitely deflating. Some explain the decline by saying there is scarcely anybody left to get married. Certainly most returned servicemen must by now have completed their eager dash to the altar. And of recent years the middle-aged and elderly unattached have been equally zealous to wed. However, a new crop for the marriage market comes on every year, including the youngsters, the widowed and divorced.

Several depressing factors may have been slowing up the marriage business, namely the high cost of living. The housing shortage with its attendant life with in-laws, and the return of caution, which went out the window with the emotionalism of wartime. Marriage experts also report a long-range growth of an attitude among men to cling to the single life and its freedom from responsibility. Possibly this is reasserting itself. However, those still willing to gamble on marriage may be assured to learn that despite its present recession, the marrying cycle still persists, and that wedlock generally remains a good solid investment.

SAILOR

He twanged his banjo
And played a chord;
The light in his eyes
Was like a sword;
He sang, "She must
Be a witch's daughter
When I am with her
My heart is water."

He drank his rum
And set down his glass;
Men drew aside
To let him pass.
He walked like one
Who is his sleep
Drowns in a tide
Mysterious, deep.

Without a word
They watched him go;
His steps reluctant,
Laggard, slow,
Over the hill
To a cottage where
A girl sat combing
Her long black hair.

Nonintervention

In the past month I have been reading the articles dealing with the Central American problem, by Sumner Welles, Dr. Raoul J. Diaz de Arana and others.

Those who today defend the theory of nonintervention, are the same ones who before intervened directly and without consulting other Latin American states. I refer, of course, to Mr. Welles. Let me cite some passages of a book by Bannon-Dunne, entitled Latin America, a Historical Survey, and from another book entitled Latin America, by Dana Munro.

They point out that on October 8, 1942, Sumner Welles accused Argentina and Chile of permitting German agents to operate within their territory. This speech was delivered at Boston. That accusation provoked wide resentment in both countries and President Riosa of Chile, who had a scheduled visit to the United States, canceled it.

In May 1933 Sumner Welles ordered President Gerardo Machado to resign. Not satisfied with that he had Carlos Manuel de Cespedes appointed as President of Cuba. Because he was an appointee of Sumner Welles, the students continued their riots in Cuba, although the United States had 30 warships in Cuban ports at the time. This shortsighted interventionist policy of Sumner Welles brought about his resignation as Ambassador on December 13 of that year.

Today one of the most peculiar interventionists of our times comes out for nonintervention on the basis of an existing treaty.

Fortunately we laymen in the United States have men like Dr. Diaz to show us the fallacies involved in this type of argument. Examining closely Dr. Diaz's letter of November 2, I have not been able to see how he could be misunderstood. He simply sets forth why in his opinion a treaty negotiated by governments not representing the direct will of the people, could not be considered valid; he has not advocated intervention.

Alternative To War

In your November 16 editorial, "Civil Defense," you state that "the war front is now synonymous with the home front." A corollary to this proposition seems to be that the peace front is also synonymous with the home front. This latter proposition has been too much overlooked in these days of "unity" behind the bipartisan foreign policy.

The Truman doctrine, the Marshall Plan, Atlantic Union—none of these programs offer a final answer to the problem of peace. Insofar as such programs reconstruct and unify exhausted democracies and discourage Russian imperialist ambitions, they can only provide time in which to consider our ultimate foreign policy alternatives.

We may ultimately decide that peace and the salvation of our skins are to be desired at any cost and, hence, submit to the Russian scheme of world empire. Or we may ultimately decide that Russian rule is to be averted at any cost and, hence, wage a preventive war against Russia, while we alone have the bomb, and establish, in the wake of this war, an American empire.

To me, it seems that both of these alternatives demand too much. Both demand surrender of liberty and democracy—the one by passively allowing and the other by actively creating a world despotism.

There seems to me to remain but one alternative—the application of our American principles of federalism and democracy on a world scale—the formation of a democratic federal world government. Obstacles exist along the road to the world republic, but if there is no other honorable choice, certainly this one last hope is worth the best in each of us.

Honest Auto Dealer

Recent newspaper reports quote some of the witnesses before the congressional subcommittee investigating sales practices of certain Washington automobile dealers as claiming "They do it all over. . . ." I would like to tell you of one Washington car dealer who certainly did not do business in the manner brought out before the subcommittee. I refer to Hill & Tibbetts, Ford dealer, in your city.

Early in 1946, returning from overseas service and finding myself without a car, I went to Hill & Tibbetts. I had never done business with them before and had no car for a trade-in. I was treated with the utmost courtesy and, upon leaving a nominal deposit, was given priority No. 214. Although I moved to New England soon after (and this was known to the dealer), I received a long-distance telephone call late in 1946 informing me that my car was ready for delivery. I paid not one cent in "tips," was not asked to take any "extras," and drove my new car out of the shop secure in the knowledge that there is at least one honest automobile agency in Washington.

"Blood And Loyalty"

I hope that your December 2 editorial, "Blood and Loyalty," reaches the proper eyes and minds with the same effectiveness as did Jerry Kluttz's item a few weeks ago.

May I suggest that a transcript of the hearing covering the particular discussion regarding the "opinion of segregation of white and Negro blood in Red Cross blood banks" together with a copy of your able editorial be sent to the loyalty review boards, to those responsible for their appointments, to the heads of the various governmental units, and to members of Congress, with a request for their opinions and also a request as to what they will do to eliminate so Un-American an approach to determine the loyalty of employes in question.

Some time ago The Washington Post made a courageous contribution to clearing out some of the red herrings in the loyalty investigations by publishing Bert Andrews' revelations. It is obvious that unceasing vigilance is required to batter down the bigoted thinking which would substitute proven Un-American standards for standards which have not yet been proven Un-American.

VA Inefficiency

I remain at a loss to understand why the apparent inefficiency of the Veterans Administration regional office in handling subsistence payments to veteran students has escaped public attention and investigation.

Granted that there are thousands of students attending schools here under the GI bill is that sufficient cause for delays in payment or nonpayment month after month? Does not the Veterans Administration maintain a staff whose sole duty consists of executing the processing of subsistence checks; a staff paid by the United States Government from public funds?

Keep Chinese Students Coming

In this black hour for China what can we do to help? The answer on the military and political side lies with the Chiefs of Staff and the Department of State. On the human relations side there is something that we can do immediately that, in the years to come, may assure us of a friendly, understanding government in China.

There are approximately 2500 students from China in this country. These students passed competitive examinations in order to qualify for this opportunity. These men and women represent the educational leadership of the coming generation. Millions of Chinese and American dollars have been invested in their travel to this country and in their studies to date.

In my opinion it will be a veritable disaster to American influence and interest if these students are forced to drop their studies of America, of our methods, and of our philosophy and are returned en masse to a disintegrating economy and to political chaos at home.

I would like to propose that very serious consideration be given by all persons interested in American interests abroad and in particular by the Economic Coordination Administration to the needs of the Chinese students. I propose that $1,500,000 of the funds earmarked for China be made immediately available to assure the completion of the education of these students in this country. Safeguards should be set up that would permit only those students whose seriousness of purpose and whose qualifications to continue their studies are certified to by the recognized educational institutions which they are attending.

This is not a new departure; we have had long and successful experience with students who have come to this country on the Boxer Indemnity funds. These men and women have constituted the element most devoted to American principles during the past 30 years. The United States Office of Education has already, with a small appropriation, pointed the way for the efficient and flexible administration of such a fund.

The selected students from China came to this country with the assurance that they would be able to purchase American dollars at a reasonable rate for the period of their studies. The Chinese government was forced to discontinue special exchange provisions and the cost of American dollars to Chinese students increased 1000 fold in three months. American universities throughout the land have made a special effort to admit these students, to integrate them into the student body, and where necessary, to give them such assistance as was available. The present financial crisis cannot possibly be met by the educational institutions.

It is time that the contribution which the colleges and universities have made to the cause of American interests abroad should be officially recognized and that our efforts in the past few years in the education of Chinese students should not come to a sudden and tragic end.

Historical Turning Point

By Andre Visson

Ruhr And Atlantic Pact

NEVER since the end of hostilities have our policy-makers in Washington faced greater historical responsibilities than at the present time. The decisions they make today are bound to affect not only our future but that of our children.

The status of the Ruhr and the North Atlantic alliance are not just "technical" or "strategic" problems. The solutions which our policy-makers are now favoring may be prompted by immediate economic or strategic considerations. But they are bound to have extremely important political repercussions in the future.

Soon after the Marshall Plan went into operation we discovered that there can be no lasting economic recovery in western Europe without a minimum of security. The need for such security prompted us to open negotiations on a North Atlantic alliance. In the course of these negotiations we realized that a North Atlantic alliance would be meaningless unless we provided the necessary military equipment for our western European allies who greatly weakened by the war, have neither the economic resources nor the financial means with which to pursue their economic recovery and at the same time rearm.

To be sure, they have the manpower, but they expect us to furnish the arms. This means that we would have to send them both tractors and tanks. This is quite a big order even for such a rich country as the United States. It would not only impose a heavy burden on our taxpayers but it would tax our steel production itself.

STEEL being the key commodity for both European economic recovery and European rearmament, our policy-makers quite naturally turn their eyes to other places where steel can be produced. What better place than the Ruhr to solve their economic headaches? Here was one of the greatest steel production areas in the world. Moreover, it was an area over which we had practically complete control—thanks to our victory. It was for us to decide what the Ruhr's steel production should be.

To make this solution even more attractive, increased production of steel in the Ruhr would, to a great extent, solve the economic headaches attendant upon our occupation of western Germany. Increased employment in western Germany would win us more German friends. Increased exports from western Germany would allow the Germans to pay for the food and raw materials which they must buy abroad in order to live and work. And as we have until now been footing the bill for German purchases abroad, new foreign earnings by German exporters would help to lighten the burden now carried by the American taxpayer.

Viewed from this side of the Atlantic, there is no question but that the decision to increase the steel production of the Ruhr and to stop dismantling German plants appears the perfect solution. Unfortunately for us, however, many people on the other side of the Atlantic view such a solution as a very great threat to their security. And since their security is precisely the objective which we are trying to achieve through the Marshall Plan and the North Atlantic alliance, we cannot help wondering whether our solution for the Ruhr is really as perfect as it appears.

THE OVERWHELMING majority of the French people—whom we want to put back on their feet and to whom we want to restore a feeling of safety in their homes and their rebuilt factories — shudder at the idea that our efforts to rebuild western Europe will have as one of its first results the rebuilding of the very German plants from which came all the armaments that brought invasion and enslavement upon the people of France.

We would be very wrong indeed if we were to believe that the opposition to the resurgence of the Ruhr steel industry comes mostly from the Communists, the De Gaulists and the French steel industrialists who, to be sure, all have their particular reasons for disliking and fearing it. The De Gaulists and the Communists are the most vocal in their opposition and are trying to exploit it for their own purposes. The French steel industrialists are unquestionably also prompted by their particular interests.

But this writer spent the greater part of the summer and fall in France. He talked with many Frenchmen who were niether De Gaulists nor Communists and who, to the best of his knowledge, had no stock in the French steel corporations. And they were all horrified by our solution for the Ruhr. They kept asking: "Do you realize what you are doing? With one hand you are pouring billions of dollars into our countries and with the other you are lighting the fuse attached to a time bomb."

The darkening shadow of the Ruhr steel mills over the glowing sun of the Marshall Plan in a recent Christian Science Monitor cartoon sums up perfectly the feelings of all the Frenchmen with whom this writer talked. One does not need to be a great expert on French psychology to forsee that most Frenchmen will feel the same way about the North Atlantic alliance which is expected to be more actively discussed next week.

Matter of Fact

Endless Siege Likely in Berlin

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT IS just possible that a last, desperate attempt to find a settlement of the ever more threatening Berlin crisis will be made by the Western powers. What is being discussed is a French proposal that all four powers, including the Soviets, leave Berlin, and that a neutral commission appointed by the United Nations be substituted as the governing authority.

It is by no means certain, or even likely, that such a radical new approach to the Berlin question will be adopted. Yet the following facts are interesting. The idea has been proposed to, and considered by, French Foreign Minister Robert Schuman. It has not been adopted as official French policy, but it has also been informally proposed to top British officials by a ranking French diplomat.

Moreover, policy-makers of the State Department have independently conceived and considered the same idea as, at a maximum, a way out of the Berlin impasse, and, at a minimum, a method of seizing the initiative in the Berlin crisis. And it can be stated on excellent authority that certain influential American policy-makers enthusiastically favor some such move.

The reason for this rather frantic search for a new approach to the Berlin crisis is perfectly simple. Dr. Juan Bramuglia's committee of currency experts will no doubt now go through the motions of trying to find an agreed method of introducing the Soviet mark into Berlin as a basis of settlement. But an agreement on currency can no longer form a basis of settlement. Indeed, the fact might as well be faced that ther is obviously no real possibility of any effective four-power settlement at all.

Last Pretense Gone

A SETTLEMENT, whether on currency or on any other issue, clearly requires an agreed, joint four-power control of the city, as optimistically envisaged at Potsdam. Four-power control, of course, broke down in all but name a long time ago, because of endless Russian obstruction. The Russians have now thrown away the last pretense of four-power control, by refusing to allow in their zone the elections to which they agreed at Postdam, and by promoting a rump Communist city government. Without real four-power control, there can be no settlement, while the four powers remain in Berlin.

Thus, unless some such desperate last-minute approach as that now being discussed succeeds, what is in prospect is an endless siege. Gen. Lucius Clay, American commander in Germany, believes that the Anglo-American airlift can counter the siege indefinitely, for years if necessary.

The drawbacks of the informal French suggestion for general withdrawal from Berlin must be immediately obvious. In the unlikely event that Moscow agreed to the plan, the troops of the Western allies would retire to the border of the Soviet zone. The troops of the Soviet occupation would retire only to the border of Berlin city. In the present state of affairs in Berlin, a neutral commission under the U. N. would have the utmost difficulty in holding an honest election. If such an election were held, the Berlin Communists would be snowed under. The U.N. Commission would then be left presiding over a tiny, undefended enclave in the Soviet zone, whose anti-Communist government would constitute a permanent affront to the Kremlin.

Face-Saving Straw

IN these circumstances, the temptation for the Russians to renew their tactics of bullying and intimidation would be all but irresistible. Any manufactured incident could be used as a pretext for again closing the Berlin supply lines, which would have the immediate result of starving the city into submission. In short, the motive of the French proposal is obviously to achieve what the French have always wanted—a way to retire from the Berlin impasse "with head high," and without any loss of face.

On the other hand, if the plan were offered, and rejected by Moscow, Soviet policy would be left without a leg to stand on.

If the Russians agreed to the plan, a simultaneous withdrawal from Austria might also be arranged, thus solving another, almost forgotten, but extremely acute problem. And the danger of a Russian attack on Berlin's independence might be considerably reduced by Anglo-Franco-American guarantees that any invasion of Berlin or reestablishment of the blockade would be regarded as a casus belli.

There would always be doubt, nonetheless, whether these guarantees would be lived up to. The new proposal, in truth, is a measure of the pessimism of the Western policy-makers. Even two months ago, such a plan would not have been seriously considered, either in Washington or London. Now it is being seriously discussed because there is no other way out of the Berlin impasse except to continue the airlift indefinitely or to send an ultimatum to Moscow, with attendant heavy risk of immediate war.

In the end, continuation of the airlift will probably be the course chosen. If it is costly in money to us, its political cost to the Soviet Union is almost incalcuable. But the fact will still remain that the best-informed, most responsible officials on both sides of the Atlantic are intensely gloomy about the world outlook.

30 Years, Then Up or Out

Rear Admiral Rank Is Elusive

By James M. Minifie

TWO hundred Navy captains with 30 years of service were automatically relegated this week to the retired list as of the end of next June when the Navy failed to select them for promotion to rear admiral.

Twenty-four were tapped this week for the coveted rank, which carries with it the two-starred flag, the broad band of gold braid, and what every naval man thinks of as the culmination of a life's career.

The selection was made out of some 300 candidates. The other 76, however, having failed of selection only once, will get one more chance. But next year, after another board has sat, about 92 per cent of them will also be "selected out."

This is the result of the workings of the inexorable system which the Navy adopted 30 years ago, and modified slightly in 1934. It is the "selection-up-or-cut system," probably the most efficient and impersonal method of promotion ever devised. Before it came in, promotion in the Navy went strictly on seniority. As Admiral William S. Sims remarked: "Anyone who doesn't assault his superior officer and has a good stomach will ultimately be an admiral."

It isn't so now. Selection begins with the rank of lieutenant. Public Law 381 of the Eightieth Congress, known as the "Navy officers' bill of rights," spells out in detail what shall be done.

Attrition Rises

IT IS fairly tough all along the way. But until the rank of captain is reached about three quarters of the officers in lower grades can be accommodated in the next higher grade. After that the rate of attrition rises enormously.

Only 7 per cent of those in and above the "promotion zone" made it this year. This zone reached down into the class of 1921, or rather to those who joined the Navy that year, since it is no longer essential to have gone to Annapolis to make flag rank.

Below the zone, eligible captains can still be picked out for flag rank. Eligibility means three years or more in the rank of captain. Fifteen of this year's batch came from this list. When a man junior to the promotion zone is selected, his advancement does not prejudice the chances of the men senior to him who are also not in the promotion zone.

Only those who are in the promotion zone are deemed to have failed of promotion if they are not selected. Two such failures and 30 years' service mean that the retirement ticket is automatic.

The actual selection is done by a board of six general line flag officers with three more either general line, engineering or aeronautical engineering flag officers sitting in when candidates from these various divisions are considered.

Retirement Pay

FOR THE fortunate selectee it means the culmination of a lifetime of work and absorption. It does not mean an immediate increase in pay, however. His pay and allowances remain that of a senior captain for another three or four years, until he can push into the "upper half."

This pay has increased only 10 per cent since 1908. It is $8544 a year. It was set by Congress 41 years ago as the equivalent of a Congressman's salary. This has now gone up to $12,500 plus $2500 expenses on which income tax is not paid. Roughly double what an admiral now gets.

For those who do not make it, the results of the selection boards mean some pretty heavy heartbreak. There is no recourse. The work of a lifetime is over. Retirement brings a retirement salary of $5150 for a captain of 30 years service. That amount doesn't go far under present conditions.

The Gallup Poll

Delayed Decisions

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

POLITICAL strategists in future presidential elections undoubtedly will devote considerable attention to the crucial number of voters who do not make up their minds until the final stages of the campaign.

New and significant evidence of the importance of these undecided voters in the 1948 election is provided by personal interviews with more than 2200 people throughout the country who cast ballots November 2.

These interviews, conducted on farms, in towns and in large cities, also point up the effectiveness of President Truman's vigorous stumping toward the end of his campaign.

To get an approximation of when most people decided to vote for the candidate of their choice, interviewers were instructed to ask:

"When did you definitely make up your mind to vote for (the candidate the respondent named)?"

The answers indicate twice as many Truman as Dewey voters came to a decision in the latter part of the campaign, including Election Day itself. Twenty-two per cent of Truman voters questioned said they came to a decision after October 1, while only 10 per cent of Dewey voters settled on him in that period.

Importance of this fact to Truman's victory can be seen by comparing the answers in today's survey with those to the same question asked after the 1944 election. Four years ago approximately equal numbers of voters made up their minds for Roosevelt and Dewey in the final weeks.

The following table shows when the people interviewed in today's survey finally decided on the candidate of their choice:

	Truman	Dewey	*All Voters
Before campaign started	46%	64%	54%
Early in campaign	11	12	12
First half Oct.	4	2	3
Second half Oct.	13	5	9
Election Day	5	3	4
Indefinite	21	14	18
	100%	100%	100%

Includes people who voted for other candidates as well as for Truman and Dewey.

Oil Traps Hold Dirt

An oil trap that keeps down dust helps some people allergic to dust, Dr. Arthur F. Coca of Pearl River, N. Y., reports in the Annals of Allergy. The trap is a chemical that makes an oil solution in water, and which then can be put in a light film on blankets, rugs, sofas and other objects.

Its makers (L. S. Green Associates, New York) say the chemical doesn't produce any change in the normal feel or appearance of treated materials.

Transfusions Traced

By Alton L. Blakeslee

Associated Press Science Reporter

BOSTON, Dec. 4.—Radioactive blood is teaching doctors some things that happen in your body when you get a blood transfusion.

Many of the transfused red blood cells you get are broken down quickly in your own body. Some are destroyed even while the transfusion is being made. Others live and work for days, weeks or months.

But this quick cannibal work at the outset isn't a total loss. Iron from the broken-down cells is used by your own body to make new red blood cells. The radioactive detective shows this is done in a hurry. Within four hours, your body may be using some of the iron from broken-down cells to make its own new red cells.

Radioactive iron was used in these discoveries. It behaves in the body just like ordinary iron, but can be measured and traced whereever it goes. A person can be given injections of radioactive iron, and after a time some of his red blood cells will be radioactive. There's no effect on him, and no danger. But he can donate tagged blood for studies of transfusions.

In a healthy human being, red blood cells live about 120 days on the average. They are then replaced by new cells, made by the billions per day in your red bone marrow factories.

When blood is taken from a donor and stored, some of the red blood cells die in storage. It's these inactive ones that your body first destroys and removes from circulation, explains Dr. Joseph F. Ross of Boston University School of Medicine. Dr. Ross is one of a group of scientists using the radioisotopes in study of blood problems and puzzles.

Rapid Production

WHEN RADIOACTIVE iron is injected into a person, some of his red blood cells are radioactive within four hours. The iron is used in making hemoglobin, a protein part of the cell that carries oxygen. Radioactive iron released from the breakdown of transfused cells apparently can be reused just as quickly as injected iron, he said.

This speed of use can mean that red cells in the marrow mature much faster than believed, or that the hemoglobin part of the red cells is formed last.

In wartime, Dr. Ross was one of the scientists who studied means of preserving whole blood longer. Before the war, blood couldn't be kept safely for much longer than three to five days.

Whole blood now can be stored 21 days or longer, by use of a better preservative solution and by keeping it cold. Tests with radioactive iron played a large role in perfection of preservative solutions which made it possible to ship hundreds of thousands of pints of blood to battlefields over the world in the last war.

Earlier tests with the iron showed the human body absorbs iron only when it needs it. The body will absorb proteins, some minerals and chemicals, and then discard them if they aren't needed. But iron is not even absorbed unless there is a need for it. Just how that need is registered isn't yet known.

In one kind of anemia, red cells are destroyed too fast. A treatment for this is to give repeated transfusions of healthy blood. It is a life-saving measure, but not a cure. Over a period of years, a person with this anemia may be given dozens or even 100 or more transfusions.

In a few cases, these transfusions can lead to trouble. The continual breakdown of thousands of billions of red cells releases much more iron than the body needs for making new red cells. Trouble comes because the body is not able to dispose of this excess iron properly. It may become deposited in the liver, heart, and other organs, and then will cause death. How to get rid of this excess is not yet known. Studies with radioactive iron may help in solving this problem.

A PLASTIC (bakelite polyethylene) is a good substitute for human cartilage and bone in plastic surgery, says a report in the Journal of Plastic and Reconstructive Surgery. The report is by Drs. Leonard T. Rubin, George W. Robertson and Raymond H. Shapiro of Kings County Hospital, Brooklyn.

They reported good results using the plastic in reconstructing noses, ears, jaws and even large portions of human skulls. The polyethylene can be molded into any desired shape, has much of the flexibility and resiliency of living cartilage and won't warp or dissolve, they said.

The flavor of raw meat is in the juices, while the flavor of cooked meat is in the fibers. This is the conclusion of chemists of Arthur D. Little, Inc., New York, after some tests.

Lean beef was pounded, pressed and washed until all the juices were removed. The grayish fiber remaining had practically no flavor. But once it was cooked, the fiber developed a strong meat taste. The raw meat juice had a faintly bloody odor and taste. But when it was cooked, the juice had no meat flavor.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

'Lame Ducks' Also Flying South

By Drew Pearson

WILD DUCKS are not the only birds flying South these days. Several lame ducks, defeated in November, are taking their last sightseeing flights at Government expense.

Congressmen Bartel Jonkman, Michigan Republican, and Pete Jarman, Alabama Democrat, who will not be back in Congress, are now touring South America. They are traveling with the House Foreign Affairs Committee, but have no real reason to take the trip since they can't use their knowledge for the benefit of the taxpayers who finance it.

Lame-duck Congressman Fred Busbey of Illinois, the Chicago Tribune's private representative in the Eightieth Congress, has flown to Venezuela "to look into American oil interests," is planning to stop in Mexico City on the way back to tell Mexican authorities what he saw. By the time he returns to report to the American people he will no longer be in Congress nor in a position to do anything about Venezuelan oil.

Congressman Walter Ploeser, defeated Missouri Republican, is also scheduled to take an "official trip" to Panama.

Four others traveled to California to hold hearings on future farm legislation—though they will have nothing to say about future farm policy. They are: Congressmen Anton Johnson of Illinois, George Gillie of Indiana, Chester Gross of Pennsylvania and Hadwen Fuller of New York—all defeated Republicans.

These junkets were started after election, not before.

Soft-Drink Probe

THE REPUBLICANS have dared do what the Democrats never even sniffed at—look into the competitive position of the giant Coca-Cola Co.

At one time or another the Democrats have taken the lid off almost everything, but with big Jim Farley a top Coca-Cola executive, they have steered clear of the soft-drink industry. It was left to the Senate Small Business Committee under the Chairmanship of GOP Senator Wherry of Nebraska to pry the bottle-cap off Coca-Cola's alleged monopoly attempts.

The testimony was given by members of the National Brands Soft Drinks Institute, and at first even its spokesmen seemed nervous about mentioning the famous trade name, "Coca-Cola." Their chief gripe was the monopoly Coca-Cola was securing by its use of vending machines which do not sell any other soft drink.

During the first half of the day's hearings no one even identified Coca-Cola by name. Finally, in the afternoon, Mandrell Anixter, counsel for the Soft Drinks Institute, read timidly from a letter mentioning Coca-Cola.

"That name," warned Committee Counsel George Meredith, "may go into the record."

Edward Mehren, who operates the Squirt Company and is chairman of the Soft Drink Institute, continued the testimony, but was still cagey about coming out with the name.

"It is known generally in the industry," he declared, "that one company has plans based on a 10-year program for placing one single-product vending machine for every 200 people in the United States. Several cities have been tested on that program already, including Baltimore and Kansas City."

Bernard Berns, vice president of Dad's Root Beer Co., warned that this would crowd other soft drinks off the market.

"We have already been eliminated out of thousands of gasoline stations nationally," he protested. "They come in with a story to a station owner and say: 'Here, you don't know whether you get your nickel for the beverage or not. We will put in a machine and you can pay for it over a period of time.'

"They have placed them by the thousands. You see them strung across the entire country."

"Once a single-drink vending machine goes into a location," queried Ray Dickey of the Senate committee staff, "can anyone else get in there?"

"No," replied Berns. "In a factory they may place a few other brands around, but in the average small outlet—such as these offices or these retail stores or gasoline stations—once a machine goes in there, you are eliminated from that outlet 100 per cent."

Berns estimated that 225,000 Coca-Cola venders, or "red devils" as they are called in the trade, have been scattered across the country.

Then he read letters from vending machine manufacturers who refused to sell other than to Coca-Cola. These letters came from Westinghouse Electric Corp., F. L. Jacobs Co., and Lyon Manufacturing Corp.

Only exception was the Canteen Co.

"They are an independent operator of flavor machines," explained Mr. Conover. Then he added triumphantly: "Where they have put in an exclusive machine vending Coca-Cola, where they buy the syrup from the Coca-Cola Co., and then later on in the same location put in a machine which vends Coca-Cola and two other flavors, the flavors will outsell the Coca-Cola."

'You have reminded me of something," broke in Berns. "One thing is the fact that the Government assisted the Coca-Cola Co. in developing world-wide distribution."

Catherine Guyon, Senate committee consultant, agreed.

"You couldn't buy anything else," she admitted. "The Army and the Navy and the Air Force had to bring the beverage overseas, but it was always Coca-Cola."

Chief Counsel George Meredith asked the small bottlers whether they had considered bringing an antitrust suit against Coca-Cola.

"Yes, we have given considerable thought to it," replied Joseph Danzansky, attorney for the Soft Drink Institute. "We felt, however, that we wanted a peaceful solution of our problem, if possible. We felt that if all of the facts were laid before this committee, we could possibly come to a conclusion that wouldn't involve a lot of litigation. We are not litigation-minded in this fight; we are merely fighting to stay in business."

R. A. Conover, president of O-So-Great in Chicago, added that his bottlers in Texarkana, Tex., and Sanford, N. C., had proposed a State tax against vending machines as a method of stopping them.

The investigation adjourned without any definite conclusions, except that the soft-drink representatives seemed to be veering toward a demand for antitrust action.

D. C. to See Priceless David Statue

DAVID (OR APOLLO?)
About 1530-1534

Michelangelo's priceless life-size David is due to go on exhibit at the National Gallery of Art within a few weeks.

The 58¾ inch marble figure is being lent by the Italian government as a gesture of friendship.

The figure will get a place of honor in the gallery and may be shown for the first time at the official reception following the inauguration of President Truman. One thing is certain—gallery aides will call it "David." It is frequently called "Apollo" and some students identify it as "David-Apollo"—a conflict stemming from the artist's own treatment of the figure.

John Walker, chief curator of the gallery, hailed the loan announcement in Rome as the "greatest" event since arrival here of the German paintings and a marvelous "opportunity" for Americans.

The statue, still confused by many with the much earlier colossal-scale David now in the Florentine Academy, is approximately life size. The piece was carved directly from a flawless block of Cararra marble—in about 1525.

According to Charles Seymour, jr., assistant chief curator and curator of sculpture, very soon after Michelangelo completed the figure "two varying interpretations of the intended subject became current."

A second theory was that the figure represents an Apollo drawing an arrow from his quiver.

Scholars now generally believe, Seymour said, that the figure was intended by Michelangelo as a David but was later modified by him when he was asked to make an Apollo for the unpopular Governor of Florence, Baccio Valori.

Seymour, who described the work as one of Michelangelo's "greatest," said it differs "radically" from the "overt, heroic interpretation" of David expressed in the artist's earlier marble.

The United States Government, which asked specifically for the David—for many years center of attraction in the Michelangelo room of the Bargello, the National Gallery of Renaissance sculpture in Florence, has promised to take special precautions to prevent damage.

The statue is expected to remain here for approximately six months. Gallery officials were uncertain as to when it will arrive here.

Outright opposition to proposed Arlington professional and business taxes is expected Monday night from at least two sources when the measure comes up for a public hearing in the county courthouse.

Attorney Oren R. Lewis, who will represent the Arlington medical and dental societies at the hearing, said members of those two groups will oppose the professional license tax.

The Arlington County Board, which is holding the hearing, will act on the business and professional tax, as well as a levy on auto licenses, following the public meeting.

One member of the Arlington Medical Society, who asked that his name not be used, said doctors would "take a beating" under the tax proposal, which would require them to pay 52 cents annually for every $100 of gross receipts.

He said costs were up 67 per cent, while medical fees had jumped only 37 per cent over a 10-year period.

Further, the doctor declared, Arlington physicians had already contributed their free services to indigents on many occasions in the past, which represented "a considerable donation of free service to the county."

Also expected to take an active part in the hearings is the Arlington Chamber of Commerce, which went on record early in favor of both tax measures.

However, Chamber Secretary Paul Hill said he would outline the chamber's views on how the money would be spent and would probably request certain changes in the laws.

Fight Begins Tomorrow On Annexation

On Monday, the Falls Church City Council may be prepared to take the first step in an annexation battle with Fairfax County.

In a special meeting that night, the council will consult the last of four engineering firms to come before it and bid for a $2500 preliminary annexation survey.

At the conclusion of the interview, the council may be able to make a definite appointment for the job, according to City Attorney LaRue Van Meter.

The city has appropriated $14,000 for annexation surveys. The $2500 sum would be used for an initial study, to see if annexation is feasible. The remaining $11,500 would be spent for a complete survey if it is.

Outright opposition to Falls Church's annexation plans was expressed by the Fairfax board of supervisors in a meeting Wednesday. Members pointed out that the county stands to lose at least 7 square miles of well-to-do, tax-producing land.

Interviewed by the Falls Church Council Monday night will be the Washington firm of Johnson & Williams. Already consulted have been Harlan Bartholomew and Associates of St. Louis, Mo.; Wylie & Wilson of Lynchburg, Va., and Aubrey LaPlace of Arlington, Va.

Dying Crane Species Still Numbers 33

Austwell, Tex., Dec. 4 (NYHT). The last remnant of the whooping cranes, America's tallest bird, has returned to its wintering grounds on the Texas coast without loss in total numbers. Careful counts made during the last few days show that 28 birds arrived from their unknown nesting sites, believed to be in northern Canada.

The birds brought three young with them, but three adults failed to arrive, leaving the species just about even for the year, in its struggle for survival. In addition to the 28 migrating birds, there are four non-migrants here, and a lone bird in Louisiana. Thus, the world total for this species, once considered one of the finest game birds in America, stands at 33.

Counts of the whooping crane were made from an airplane and on the ground by Robert P. Allen, ornithologist of the National Audubon Society. His two-year study is part of the whooping crane project, a concentrated effort of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Audubon Society and other organizations to save it from extinction.

The birds are guarded by Charles A. Keefer, manager of the refuge where the birds pass the winter, and his staff. The Audubon Society also maintains a warden to keep check on the cranes. The species is at such a low ebb that even the loss of one bird may be vital to their survival.

Woman's Jaw Dislocated By a Yawn

'48 injuries to date	5547
'47 injuries same period	4841
'48 deaths to date	231
'47 deaths same period	204

A woman who dislocated her jaw with a yawn was one of 103 home accident victims treated last week at local hospitals, according to the District Red Cross home accident survey.

Three deaths due to home accidents, included that of a 46-year-old man who died as a result of swallowing chicken bones, and of an elderly woman, severely burned when her clothing caught fire from a stove. A third death was caused by a fall.

A woman who swallowed medicine which congealed in her esophagus was treated at Episcopal Hospital, and two other women overcome by coal gas were revived at Providence Hospital.

Five exploding gas stoves caused first and second-degree burns last week. An oil stove, which blew up, forced a middle-aged woman to leap out a window, cutting her forehead.

A 36-year-old woman, who put disinfectant on a burn caused by a heater, badly irritated the injury.

Two children cut themselves when they tripped over toys, and two persons severed fingertips when they fell on glass.

Children swallowed lye, a nail, crude oil, camphorated oil and camphor.

ABC Hearing Set for Monday

A hearing on protests against issuance of a new Class B license to Lawrence F. Scheiter, 1500 Ogden st. nw., for sale of beer and light wines in a grocery will be held by the District Alcoholic Beverage Control Board at 10 a. m. Monday in the Municipal Center.

The board will hold a public hearing at 10 a. m. Wednesday on two proposed changes in regulations on the sale of liquor. One change requested by some liquor wholesalers would prohibit sale of liquor below distillers' recommended prices and the other would permit sale of tax-free liquor to embassies here.

WASHINGTON, SUNDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1948

U. S. Must Accept 'New China' on Its Own Terms

By Owen Lattimore

Mr. Lattimore was formerly political adviser to Chiang Kai-shek and United States Government wartime expert on Far Eastern policy. He has written several books on Asia.

LOOKED at from Washington, China presents a spectacle of disaster, defeat and dismay. China is the exposed flank of American policy.

In western Europe our policy dovetails into the interests of countries which have democratic institutions, representative governments, well developed industries and a mixture of capitalistic enterprise and government control over private business.

Kuomintang China, with an area as large as the United States and a much larger population, has less modern industry than a fifth-rate European state. It is not governed by elected representatives of the people. It has no democratic institutions. Its "constitution" consists of paper platitudes.

A weak patient can be strengthened by blood transfusions only if the blood is of a similar type. European economies are enough like ours to be revived by American economic transfusions. China's blood-type is too different. We have never been able to lift our economic policy in China above the famine-relief and handout level.

Frustrated in our attempts to revive China economically, and defeated at every turn in our rather feeble efforts to encourage political reform, we have found that our real policy has simmered down to one thing only: the use of Chinese manpower as cannon-fodder in an attempt to stop the spread of Chinese communism and Russian political influence by simple slaughter.

NOW that last-ditch military policy has also collapsed. Our flank in China is completely exposed. We cannot even use the United Nations as a buttress, because we ourselves are responsible for keeping our China policy entirely outside of U. N. channels.

Some countries think of the United Nations as America's internationalist right hand, and of American policy in China as America's selfish and nationalistic left hand. Consequently the world reaction to the smashing defeats of Chiang Kai-shek's armies is that Washington, even more than Nanking, has been thrown for a humiliating loss. They do not believe that this means that America's policy in Europe will also fail, but they do accept it as definite proof of the limitations of American strength.

In Washington, no attempt is being made to disguise the seriousness of the double setback to our China policy and our world prestige. The mood is one of pretty grim realism, as indicated by the refusal of both President Truman and Secretary of State Marshall to go to the aid of Chiang Kai-shek in anything faintly resembling the dramatic way in which President Roosevelt went to the aid of Winston Churchill.

This new realism must not be mistaken for defeatism. It starts by admitting that we must cold-bloodedly examine the causes of our failure in China. It goes on to lay down the ruling that from now on we must plan our strategy not according to what unlimited action we might like to take, but according to what limited action we may be able to take.

Can't Blame Marshall

IN THE what-went-wrong department, it is clear that the State Department, the favorite goat when things go wrong, cannot be made the goat this time. From the beginning Secretary Marshall and the department's career experts on China have been convinced that China is too big, too lacking in communications and in the modern forms of economic and political organization, to be successfully master-minded by us. Off the record, and very cautiously, some State Department men will hint that for the same reasons the Russians will not be able to stroll in and "take over" China.

The blame for optimistically believing that the Chinese would go on acting as cannon-fodder forever, if we would only give them guns and call them heroes, lies on the fire-breathers in the Eightieth Congress, such as Representative Walter H. Judd of Minnesota, and on the tom-tom beating in jingoistic sections of the press. Had it not been for them, Secretary Marshall might have kept our interests and prestige from being so heavily involved in the Kuomintang collapse.

In the what-can-we-do-now department, the first thing is to shovel out the wreckage of the policy of military intervention. That policy is beyond hope of salvage, either by rushing additional aid to Chiang Kai-shek or by switching our aid to second-string substitutes.

The outstanding military fact in China today is that the striking power of the Communists has become less important than the galloping collapse of the Kuomintang.

For a long time the principal source of military supplies for the Chinese Communists has been the capture of American equipment from Kuomintang troops. About two months ago government troops began to surrender more often as complete armies, with their American equipment intact and their ammunition unexpended. At least 300,000 men gave up in Manchuria alone, and it is estimated that the lost American equipment amounted to more than the total China is scheduled to receive under the current 125-million-dollar American military aid program.

This speeding up of the rate of collapse means that each shipment of American arms gets into the hands of the Communists more quickly than the previous shipment.

The Real Black Mark

IF IT IS hopeless to strengthen Chiang Kai-shek by sending more arms, it is even more hopeless to think we can do any good by diverting our aid to substitutes like Fu Tso-yi. Chiang Kai-shek was a great world figure and a genuine national hero. His one weakness, two years ago, was that while most Chinese respected and trusted him, they did not respect and did not trust many of his lieutenants.

The real black mark against the American record is that when the Marshall Mission failed and we resigned ourselves to what we thought was the necessity of taking sides in the civil war, we did so in a way that strengthened the most distrusted and least respected of his lieutenants.

It has now become impossible to rehabilitate Chiang Kai-shek. That is Fact. No. 1 of the political facts of life in China. The thing that has fatally undermined his standing as a national hero is that he has become, in Chinese public opinion, more a symbol of the policy of a foreign government than a symbol of the aspirations of the Chinese people. If foreign backing has turned into the kiss of death for a really great man like Chiang, then the transfer of American support to any "little" Chiang, like Fu Tso-yi or any other local warlord, would be fatal even more quickly.

What will count from now on is the number of warlords who try to deal with the Communists on terms a little bit better than surrender. We may anticipate with absolute confidence that a number of generals who control troops, territories and tax revenues will make approaches to the Communists.

It is possible even to predict the terms they will ask. They will say to the Communists: "You can liquidate us if you insist on fighting. But the people are tired of fighting. And after all, you yourselves have called for a coalition government. So how about a deal? Leave us in our territories. Each of us will represent his territory in your coalition government. We will guarantee to carry out certain minimum reforms, especially land reforms, but you in return must undertake not to send your troops into our territories."

One warlord who will probably try to negotiate such terms is the very same Fu Tso-yi who has been touted as a possible alternative to Chiang Kai-shek as chief recipient of American aid. He may not be successful. He has a good deal of popular support in certain sections of his domain, but he is hated by the Mongols of Inner Mongolia, whom he has treated brutally—and the Communists are anxious to win the good will of the Mongols.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Behind the lines at the critical battle of Suchow. Col. Chiang Wei-kuo (standing on ground), son of Chiang Kai-shek and chief of staff of the Nationalist Armored Corps, gives a corps commander instructions before sending the tanks into action

MORE likely to make successful deals with the Communists are the powerful Moslem leaders of the provinces of Ninghsia, Chinghai and parts of Kansu. It is standard Communist procedure to get the minorities on their side before tackling problems of revolution among the majorities.

Other local warlords are quite likely to be able to strike bargains with the Communists in the western and southwestern provinces of Szechwan, Yunnan and Kweichow, and in many territories south of the Yangtze. In all these provinces there is an old tradition of keeping on good terms with the central government while avoiding interference by it as far as possible.

Most important man in China today, however, is the Chinese peasant. The Kuomintang has been losing the civil war by trying to keep the peasant under control. The Communists have been winning by giving the peasant what he wants.

What the peasant wants is land, to be held as private property. When the Communists come into a district, they turn the land over to the peasants. When their troops have to move on, they say to the peasants, "Here are some guns. Form your own militia and defend your own land."

This results in creating an embattled countryside which fights desperately against the return of government troops. But it also results in creating armed political organizations, based on newly acquired private property, which thereafter cannot be dictated to by anybody, including the Communists.

For this reason the future policies of China are not going to originate out of small committee meetings of Communists. They are going to develop out of widespread negotiations with armed peasants who have caught on to the idea that the way to protect

Crusade in Europe: Eisenhower's Own Story

Ike Carried Home a Stalin Apology

By Dwight D. Eisenhower

XXIX

THE UNITED STATES and Russia emerged from the war the two most powerful nations of the globe. This fact affected every detail of American official routine in conquered Germany, for any prolonged struggle between the two powers would hopelessly complicate our local problems and might even nullify our costly victory. But there was involved far more than efficiency in German administration or political control.

In the past relations of America and Russia there was no cause to regard the future with pessimism. Historically, the two people had maintained an unbroken friendship that dated back to the birth of the United States as an independent republic. Except for a short period, their diplomatic relations had been continuous. Both were free from the stigma of colonial empire building by force.

Ideologically, however, they were in diametric opposition; the United States was devoted to a social and political order based upon individual liberty and human dignity; Russia, dedicated to the dictatorship of the proletariat, seemed in Western eyes to be engulfed in a form of statism under the absolute direction of a few men. By the same token, it is probable that to them our adherence to a system based upon personal liberty was actually a political immaturity that permitted exploitation of the masses. Out of this cleavage between the governmental systems of two great powers there might develop in the world two hostile camps whose differences would ultimately provoke another holocaust of war.

The Individual Level

BERLIN, we were convinced, was an experimental laboratory for the development of international accord. There the West was joined with the East in the task of reorganizing a highly complex economy and reeducating a numerous people to political decency so that Germany, purged of its capacity and will for aggression, might be restored to the family of nations.

If in that endeavor there could be developed friendly ways and means of solving our local differences and problems, a long step forward would be taken toward the friendly settlement of world problems. Overshadowing all goals for us Americans was the contribution we locally might make toward establishing a working partnership between the United States and Russia.

Our chief hope was to build among those engaged in the German occupation a friendly acceptance of each other as individuals striving peacefully to attain a common understanding and common purpose—our mutual good.

Once that spirit could be developed in Berlin it would spread beyond Germany to our own capitals. The international good feeling manifested at Potsdam between the heads of states was a favorable start.

Invitation From Stalin

THE PRESIDENT and his staff left Germany for the United States on August 2. A few days later I was informed from Washington that Generalissimo Stalin had sent me an invitation to visit Russia. This was a renewal of an invitation that originally had come to me in early June, when I could not accept because of a necessary appearance in the United States under War Department orders. With this invitation came an expression of my government's hope that I could accept.

When news of my impending visit got around headquarters, literally scores of individuals submitted personal requests to go with me. Out of consideration for Moscow's limited accommodations I took on this journey only General Clay and my old friend Brigadier General T. J. Davis. As an aide for this one trip I wanted my lieutenant son, John, who had been serving for some months in the European theater. His commander approved.

Upon arrival in Moscow we were housed at the American Embassy with my good friend Averell Harriman, who was then Ambassador. His hostess was his charming daughter, Kathleen.

Our first conference was with General Antonov, Chief of Staff of the Red Army. He took me into his war room and explained the dispositions of the Red armies in the Far East and showed me the exact plan of campaign, which had been initiated only a few days before.

A Near Contretemps

THE FOLLOWING morning was the appointed time for the big Sports Parade. This was staged in the Red Square, a paved area of considerable acreage. The only people present were the specially invited guests of the government and the performers.

Estimates as to the number of the latter varied between twenty and fifty thousand. I calculated that the lower figure was more nearly correct than the higher one.

Just after we had arrived at the raised section of concrete reserved for the American Ambassador and his party, General Antonov came to say that Generalissimo Stalin had extended to me an invitation to join him on top of Lenin's tomb, provided I should like to do so.

Since I was in the company of the American Ambassador, whose prestige as representative of the President was important, I was doubtful as to the propriety of deserting him to join the Generalissimo.

The necessity of saying everything through an interpreter denied me any opportunity to ask General Antonov, on a personal basis, for further details, and I momentarily hesitated. However, he relieved the situation by giving me the remainder of the Generalissimo's message, which was: "The Generalissimo says that if you would like to come he also invites two of your associates, if you would like to bring them."

I turned to consult quickly with the Ambassador. He said that the invitation was precedent-making; to the best of his knowledge, no other foreigner had ever been invited to set foot on top of Lenin's tomb. Realizing, therefore, that a special courtesy was intended, I quickly told General Antonov that I would be happy indeed to accept and that the associates I wanted were the Ambassador and the head of the United States Military Mission to Moscow, Major General John R. Deane.

Friendship a 'Necessity'

WE STOOD for five hours on the tom while the show went on. None o. us had ever witnessed anything remotely similar. The groups of performers were dressed in the colorful costumes of their respective countries and at times thousands of individuals performed in unison. Every kind of folk dance, mass exercise, acrobatic feat, and athletic exhibition was executed with flawless precision and, apparently, with greatest enthusiasm. The band was said to number a thousand pieces, and it played continuously presumably by sections during the entire five-hour performance.

The Generalissimo showed no sign o. fatigue. On the contrary, he appeared to enjoy every minute of the show. He invited me to his side and, through an interpreter, we conversed intermittently during the entire period of the show.

He evinced great interest in the industrial, scientific, educational, and social achievements of America. He repeated several times that it was necessary for Russia to remain friends with the United States.

Speaking through the interpreter, he said in effect: "There are many ways in which we need American help. It is our great task to raise the standards of living of the Russian people, which have been seriously damaged by the war. We must learn all about your scientific achievements in agriculture. Likewise, we must get your technicians to help us in our engineering and construction problems, and we want to know more about mass production methods in factories. We know that we are behind in these things and we know that you can help us."

Building War Spirit

THE GENERALISSIMO turned the conversation to the work of the Berlin Council and remarked that it was important not only because of its specific task but

Marshal Zhukov and General Eisenhower salute as the American and Russian national anthems are played at Moscow airport after Eisenhower's arrival August 11, 1945. Next day Ike was a guest atop Lenin's tomb because it provided a testing ground to determine whether great nations, victors in a war, could continue to cooperate effectively in the problems of peace.

I said to the Generalissimo: "Of course Marshal Zhukov and I get along splendidly. This is because great and powerful countries like yours and mine can afford to give their proconsuls in the field a sufficient amount of authority to achieve accord in local details and administrative matters. Smaller or weaker countries might possibly find it impossible to do this and difficulties would arise. But because Marshal Zhukov and I have such great leeway in reaching agreement we two usually overcome the little obstacles we encounter."

The Generalissimo agreed with me emphatically. He said, "There is no sense in sending a delegate somewhere if he is merely to be an errand boy. He must have authority to act."

A final remark of the Generalissimo's while we were watching the sports spectacle was that mass athletics and exercises were fine because of their effect upon the populace. He said, "This develops the war spirit. Your country ought to do more of this," and then he added: "We will never allow Germany to do this." At that moment we were still at war with the Japanese.

Apology for Rudeness

THE SOCIAL highlight of the Moscow trip was dinner at the Kremlin. In the glittering dining hall there was an array of Red Army marshals, with Mr. Molotov present, and a number of Foreign Office officials to act as interpreters. Officers of my party attended, as did the Ambassador and General Deane.

Toasts were many, each of them directed to the spirit of cooperation and teamwork that had been gradually evolved during the war. After dinner we saw a movie. It was a picture of the Russian operations to capture Berlin, in which battle, the interpreter told me, they had used 22 divisions and an enormous concentration of artillery.

I expressed an interest in the picture and the Generalissimo promptly said he would give me a copy. I suggested that I should also like a picture of himself and he forgot neither detail. Within a few days I received in Berlin the complete movie film together with a generously inscribed photograph of the Generalissimo.

He asked that I extend to General Marshall an expression of his personal regret for an act of what he termed personal rudeness during the progress of the war. He said that once he had received from General Marshall a piece of information concerning the enemy that later turned out to be false and occasioned some embarrassment to the Red armies.

In his irritation, he said, he sent a sharp radio message to General Marshall, but later regretted this because of his confidence that Marshall was acting in good faith. He earnestly charged me with the errand of conveying his expressions of regret to the Chief of Staff.

Not Enough Killing

ON THE night before we left Moscow the American Ambassador gave a reception for the visiting party. It was a stag affair and Russian guests were mainly individuals from the Foreign Office and the armed services.

There were the usual toasts, followed by a supper, in the midst of which the Ambassador received an urgent call to come to the Foreign Office at once. Suspecting that he might obtain news of a Japanese surrender, momentarily expected, Mr. Harriman asked me to do my best to hold all the guests.

On his return he walked to the middle of the room and announced the Japanese surrender, which brought a joyous shout of approval from all the Americans present. But I noted that old Marshal Budenny, who was standing at my side, did not seem to exhibit any great enthusiasm. I asked him whether he was not glad the war was over and he replied, "Oh yes, but we should have kept going until we had killed a lot more of those insolent Japanese."

The marshal seemed to be a most congenial, humane, and hospitable type but at the same time he seemed to have no concern that even one day's continuance of war meant death or wounds for additional hundreds of Russian citizens.

In the last installment of his "Crusade in Europe," which will be published tomorrow, General Eisenhower sums up his conclusions about the Red Army, about the Soviet Union, about Communism, and about the present challenge to America. He debated Communism and the Western tradition of personal liberty with Marshal Zhukov in Berlin, and he has thought deeply since then of the contemporary meaning of our successes and failures with the Russians.

Heavy Berlin Vote Would Discourage Reds

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

BESIEGED BERLIN goes to the polls today in an election that will show the strength of its resistance to Soviet pressure.

It will not be a direct test of strength between East and West. It will take place only in the three western sectors, where voters are still free to speak their minds and still eligible to mark their crosses on secret ballots.

The Communists, under Soviet orders, are not putting up candidates. The voters will choose members of the municipal assembly from the three anti-Communist parties: the Social Democrats, the Christian Democrats and the Liberal Democrats.

Yet the election today, unreal as it may seem, is another climax in the struggle to decide whether Russia and the Soviet system shall control the former capital of Hitler's empire.

It does not matter greatly, either in the Western capitals or in Moscow, which of the three anti-Communist parties gets the biggest vote. What matters is the size of the turnout.

If 85 or even 80 per cent of the eligible voters go to the polls and vote, the Western Allies and the western Germans will regard it as a demonstration of courage in the face of Soviet threats.

If, on the other hand, only 70 or 60 per cent go to the polls, Moscow will conclude that the people of Berlin have begun to lose faith in the West, have decided not to expose themselves to possible Soviet reprisals, and have started to reconcile themselves to eventual Soviet control.

Reprisals Are Hinted

IT HAS been an extraordinary campaign, considering that the Communists are not even on the ballot. Anti-Communist leaders have come to Berlin from all parts of western Germany, exhorting the Berliners to show that they are standing firm.

The Soviet-controlled newspapers have threatened thinly disguised reprisals against those who go to the polls. Soviet officials have branded the whole proceeding as illegal, and by way of retaliation they have set up their own government in their sector of the beleaguered and divided city.

The son of pre-Hitler Germany's first President, Fritz Ebert, has been snatched from obscurity to become "mayor" of the Communist city government. A Communist city council has been formed, and before long, no doubt, the Russians will order an election of their own to choose the members of a Communist-dominated city assembly.

So there is every prospect that Berlin will have two city governments soon, with the constant danger of bloodshed as well as civic frustration. The unending crisis over the Berlin blockade becomes harder than ever to solve.

No end is in sight—no end to the airlift, which is bringing food and fuel to 2,400,000 Berliners; no end to the division of the city and the paralysis of its government; no relief from the East-West struggle of which Berlin is both a reflection and a symbol.

THOSE who go to the polls today have lived with tension and trouble for so long that it has become an accepted part of their daily lives. They are something like the London Cockneys, these Berliners, with a toughness and a bitter humor all their own.

Though hundreds of thousands of them heiled Hitler when it was fashionable to do so, political consciousness has awakened faster in Berlin than in any other part of defeated and divided Germany.

Though their city is an island in a Soviet sea, thousands upon thousands of Berliners exposed themselves to Soviet retaliation long before the blockade and the airlift began.

Last summer, when the blockade was young, military government officials estimated that at least 35,000 Berliners had merited life sentences in Soviet labor camps by the strength of their anti-Communist political activities in the city.

The number has grown far larger today. An estimated quarter of a million turned out for a monster anti-Communist demonstration last September, within sight of Soviet guards at the boundary of the Soviet sector. Thousands have thronged into political mass meetings only a few blocks from Soviet-controlled territory, and have shouted their defiance of communism.

A Small-Scale Veto

NOW, WITH today's election, Berlin's anti-Communist spirit is being put to another test. It is a test that had its origins at the end of the war, when the Western powers and Russia agreed on the postwar division of the conquered Reich.

The right of all four major Allies to share control of the Berlin city government was established by the European Advisory Commission's agreement signed in London in September, 1944, and confirmed by the four commanders in Germany on June 5, 1945. This was the same agreement that defined the boundaries of the four Allied zones of occupation and the four sectors of Berlin.

The EAC agreement—signed, of course, by Russia as well as by the Western Allies—set up an Allied governing authority to direct jointly the administration of the Greater Berlin area. The governing body was to consist of commandants appointed by the respective commanders in chief, and from this it took its name, the Kommandatura.

When the first Western troops entered rubble-strewn Berlin in July, 1945, they found Arthur Werner, a doddering old professor of architecture, already installed by the Russians as mayor. The Russians had filled many of the chief municipal government posts with Communists.

The first Western officials in Berlin also found a city assembly already in existence, made up entirely of Soviet appointees. They could not oust any of these Communist assemblymen or city officials because the Soviets used their veto power in the Kommandatura to prevent such changes.

A "Burroughing" Action

THE Western Allies, therefore, went to work as quickly as possible in their own sectors to break the Communist stranglehold on the Berlin government. They set up administrative districts with local mayors corresponding roughly to the borough presidents in New York City. They strengthened the agencies of borough government, and in this manner enabled the non-Communist parties to play an effective part in governing at least the three western sectors of the city.

By August, 1946, the Soviet member of the Kommandatura finally agreed with his Western colleagues to order elections for a popularly elected municipal government. The date was set for October. A brief and sketchy provisional city constitution, drawn up by all four allies, was to hold effect for two years, during which time the new municipal government was expected to write a new and permanent constitution for the city.

Unquestionably the Russians were gambling on a great success at the polls for the new Socialist Unity Party, the so-called SED, which they had formed, without consulting the Western Allies, out of the Communists and Socialists in the Soviet zone.

But their gamble failed. In October, 1946, Berliners trooped to the polls in all four sectors and registered an overwhelming defeat for the Communists. The Soviet-sponsored party polled only 19.8 per cent of the vote in the whole city; the Social Democrats 48.7; the Christian Democrats 22.2, and the Liberal Democrats 9.3 per cent. Even in the Soviet sector, under the eyes of Soviet troops, the Soviet-sponsored party polled only 29.3 per cent of the vote.

Insisted on 'Review'

THE BERLINERS promptly set up a city government along the lines of the one they had known in the days of the Weimar Republic. There was, to begin with, a municipal assembly, a miniature parliament, in which all four parties were represented. The assembly, in turn, elected a "magistrat" or municipal administration, with a Socialist, Otto Ostrowski, as mayor, and two deputy mayors.

Having failed in the election, the Soviets tried incessantly to hamper the newly installed city government. They used their veto in the Kommandatura to block appointments and decisions. They insisted upon their right to pass upon every appointment and to reject those that were politically "objectionable."

The marvel in those days was that the city government did function, after a fashion; that some of the wreckage and chaos of the war was cleared up; that municipal services, like transport, were back in operation with reasonable efficiency two years after the incredible destruction of the siege.

Early in 1947 the Social Democrats voted no confidence in Mayor Ostrowski, on the ground that he had been too lenient with the Communist sympathizers in the party, and asked him to resign. In his place they elected a remarkable leader, Ernst Reuter, whom the Communists had hated with particular bitterness for 25 years.

A Lenin Acquaintance

REUTER had been wounded and permanently crippled in the First World War and taken prisoner by the Russians. He emerged from his prison camp, after the Bolshevist Revolution, as a convinced and confirmed Communist. He knew Lenin, Stalin and Molotov. He became a leader of German communism in the turbulent days that followed the 1918 defeat, but he broke with communism because he could not stomach its tactics.

In the days of the Republic Reuter directed and helped to build up the Berlin transportation system. When the Nazis came to power they twice threw him into concentration camps, but he escaped. He fled to Turkey, where he stayed for 12 years as a transport adviser to the Turkish government.

Now he was back in Berlin, his face deeply lined, his limp more noticeable than ever, but his personality so compelling that the crowds invariably cheered him at anti-Communist mass meetings.

This was the man who now won the post of Berlin's chief mayor. In the troubles that followed, and especially in the crisis that reaches a new climax today, Reuter was the man of the hour, the authentic leader of anti-Communist Berliners.

The Russians flatly refused to approve Reuter's election or to let him take office. His duties therefore had to be carried out by Louise Schroeder, one of the two deputy mayors, a courageous, gray-haired woman of 60, who was unterrified of the Communists and yet acceptable to them. When she fell ill, and had to go to a hospital in Hamburg, Ferdinand Friedensburg, the second of the deputies, assumed office as mayor. As for Reuter, he remained as director of Berlin's transport, with Soviet consent, but really ran the city from behind the scenes.

Kommandatura Stymied

ALL THROUGH 1947 the tug-of-war between east and west went on in the Kommandatura, and was felt directly or indirectly in every field of Berlin's municipal life.

By March of this year, when the Western Allies were meeting in London to set up a new west German government and to plan a new currency for the western states, a creeping paralysis of Soviet origin had set in over the functions of the Berlin city government.

The Soviet-appointed police chief intensified his efforts to communize the police of the entire city. The Soviets dismissed some municipal officials and refused to recognize others. The Kommandatura found it almost impossible to act, since its decisions had to get the unanimous vote of the four powers.

On March 20 the Soviet commandant walked out of a Kommandatura meeting, thus preventing it from doing any further business. In April the Russians withdrew from 18 Kommandatura committees, and began imposing restrictions on traffic between Berlin and the west.

In the same month the municipal government finished its draft of a new constitution, since the two-year life of the old one was expiring, but at every stage the Russians objected. The constitution still had not won Soviet approval when, on June 20, the Russian commandant finally walked out of the Kommandatura, and did not return.

The Soviet blockade of Berlin was imposed on a city already badly split between east and west, with its four-power governing authority already nonexistent and its elected mayor and many of its officials unrecognized by the Soviet authorities.

Blocked Ballot Printing

THE rest of the troubled history of the Berlin government is part of the wider story of the Soviet blockade, the Western Allies' air lift, the pro-Communist and anti-Communist demonstrations, and the violence that flared up in late August and early September, just before the Western Allies referred the blockade to the United Nations Security Council.

By September the Communists had taken physical possession of the city hall, which happened to be in the Soviet sector. The municipal government had fled to the western sectors. The Kommandatura, and the mere forms of four-power cooperation in Berlin, were nothing but memories.

The new constitution had been left in midair by the events of the summer. Since it had never been approved, the Western Allies took the position that the old constitution—the provisional one written in 1946—remained in effect, and that under its provisions an election must be held.

On September 6 the municipal assembly, meeting in the British sector, fixed November 14 as election day, and sent the Allied commandants a new electoral ordinance written by the city government. The Communists were not present at this meeting; they had refused to attend.

The three Western Allies approved the new ordinance on October 7, and agreed that election day should be "on or about" November 14. The Soviet commandant not only objected, but prevented the printing of election proclamations, although the ordinance provided that this had to be done six weeks before the poll.

On October 8 the assembly, still without its Communists, postponed election day to December 5. Again the Soviets responded by laying down rules, conditions and penalties that made it impossible for the people to vote in the Soviet sector.

In the end the city government decided to go ahead with the poll in the three western sectors. All parties except the Soviet-sponsored Communist Party promptly submitted lists of candidates, and ballots were printed in the western sectors, where the Soviets could not lay hands on them.

A Two-Ply Government

DURING November the Russians ordered wholesale "dismissals" of municipal government officials, on the theory that the four-power Kommandatura had the power and the duty under the constitution to confirm all original appointments, by unanimous vote. The Western Allies took the position that an official could only be removed, under the constitution, by unanimous action.

Since the "dismissed" officials refused to give up their jobs, Berlin had two people in charge of its food, its labor exchanges, its posts and telegraphs and its transport system. Soon it will have two full-fledged city governments. It is a situation that long ago ceased to appeal to the Berliners' sense of humor. For the millions who live in Berlin, in the eastern and western sectors alike, it has become deadly serious. The city is divided almost as completely as if an unscalable wall separated the eastern sector from the west.

Today's election will be a demonstration of Berliners' spirit, and it will show where their sympathies lie. It will not bring an end of the crisis any nearer. A big turnout today will at least show, however, that the people of the western sectors are not yet intimidated by the Soviet power and terror that surround them.

'Free' Burma Has Empire Nostalgia

By Douglas Lackersteen
Associated Press Staff Writer

RANGOON, Burma, Dec. 4.—The Burmese are watching closely the trend of events in India, across the Bay of Bengal, for a line of their own political future.

If India elects to remain within the British Commonwealth, neutral observers predict that the republic of the Union of Burma is likely to seek reentry into the family of nations it left so enthusiastically less than a year ago.

For the Burmese, the bounties of independence have not been up to expectations. It brought them riddance of 122 years of foreign rule, but it also brought strife, bloodshed and a ruined economy.

But, political sources hasten to add, any move at reunion could come only after removal of the present Socialist-dominated anti-British government. Only a general election completely free of threat and intimidation, or a coup d'etat, can achieve this.

These sources doubt whether free Burma's first elections, scheduled for March-April next year, will be held in a free atmosphere, or whether they will take place at all.

New Socialist Army

IN THE first place, these sources say, the rebellion movement still envelops more than three quarters of the country. There is a ceaseless movement of the population and it is impossible to draw up any accurate electoral roll, made further difficult by disruption of communications.

Secondly, there is the activity of private armies, backing their respective parties. Latest of these, according to confidential neutral sources, are the village levies or home guards, owing allegiance to the Socialists. Raised ostensibly to protect villages from the Communists, they take orders directly from the Socialist high command.

The third factor in any election are the Communists, who will not allow free voting in the areas they dominate.

The attainment of independence by Burma this year, in the words of former Cabinet Minister U Ba Pe, was a "gamble that went wrong." Ba Pe was the man behind the assassinated nationalist leader Aung San in his struggle for power. In an interview, he said that early in 1947 Aung San had realized that dominion status was more suited to Burma's position than independence, but dared not deviate from his declared policy of winning independence for fear of losing mass favor.

Ba Pe, who accompanied Aung San to London in January, 1947, for the signing of the Aung San-Attlee agreement, said the Burmese leader had sought with the then British governor, Sir Hubert Rance, for a means whereby Burma could accept dominion status without losing face.

Attlee Said No

EVENTUALLY an emissary, Tahin Nu, was sent to Britain to sound out British leaders on the possibility of persuading the British cabinet to make an offer of dominion status. Ba Pe said Prime Minister Attlee refused point blank to consider the suggestion.

Aung San nonetheless was still hopeful of avoiding the pitfalls of independence and set about reorienting his policy. He was assassinated before he could achieve his objective.

At this critical stage, Ba Pe said, the new leader, Thakin Nu, dared not alter the declared policy of "independence or death." To have done so would have meant country-wide rebellion and the passing of power to the Communists.

Eleven months of independence has meant for Burma 11 months of strife and chaos. The maintenance of a military machine she cannot afford, plus looting of rice and timber and rifling of treasuries, has produced a huge budget deficit. Iron, steel and machinery, scarce enough at best, are scarcer still as the result of Communist destruction of bridges, railway engines and track, communications equipment and motor transport.

Financial experts say that only outside aid can save the country from ruin. But they doubt such aid will be forthcoming in the face of the government's policy of state socialism, which embraces nationalization of all foreign-owned business. The Socialists have more than a two-thirds majority in Parliament.

The 'Civil Service Rebellion'

By Alfred Steinberg

THIS year marks the hundredth anniversary of the beginning of the Taiping Rebellion, the costliest rebellion in the world's history.

At Canton, China, in 1833, several hundred young men assembled in a government building to take a civil service examination. China is the home of government civil service based upon examination rather than political favoritism. Everyone could take the exams.

In order to be eligible for this provincial exam, it was necessary for each man to have passed district and prefectural tests. The provincial exam, which was to last nine days, was a test not of learning or ingenuity, but of memory. It was important for each of these men to make his mark because jobs were scarce and starvation was becoming common in China. Those who passed were assured of security and standing.

One of the young men who sat in the examination cell for nine days was Hung Siu-tsuen. He was 20 years old, a shy, quiet boy and a diligent student. His father was a hakka, or squatter. The hakka were tramp farmers, despised wherever they went. Hung's father had put his two elder brothers in the field when they were children, but Hung he kept at home to study and memorize, with the hope that one day he would enter the government service and rescue the family from poverty.

Hung failed the exam. Again in 1837 he failed. After the second failure he had a nervous breakdown, and with it a vision.

New Religion Born

HE DREAMED that he was lifted to heaven on an embroidered carpet. An old woman bathed him in a stream and replaced his vital organs with new ones. Then an old man took him to a window in the floor, where he could view all the evil on the earth below. He promised the old man he would help him fight that evil.

After his fourth failure of the examination in 1847, Hung received a two months' smattering of religious training in Canton from a Southern Baptist missionary, the Rev. Issacher J. Roberts. Shortly before he was to be baptized he left for his father's farm.

In the squatter's bamboo shack his sick and bitter mind tied together the vision he had had in 1837 with the Christian principles he had learned in Canton. By early 1848 he felt he had the formula for his revenge on those who had filled his life with failure. He set up his own church, called the Society for the Worship of God, and announced as his goal the baptism of all Chinese.

Hung claimed to be part of the Trinity: There was God; Jesus, the Celestial Elder Brother, and himself, the Divine Younger Brother. He labeled his followers Taipings and christened himself Tien Wang, Prince of Heaven.

In 1848 the Taipings began a march that covered 2000 miles, their forces growing as they went. Tien Wang took the old Ming capital of Nanking, drove out the Manchus and set himself up as Emperor of China.

At first he was supported by the representatives of the British and American Governments, who viewed his movement as the means by which China would become a Protestant nation. Later they changed their minds.

Undermined Own Regime

IN RETRIBUTION for failing to give him a clerkship in the government service, Tien Wang ordered all Manchus slain. He not only proscribed civil service examinations; he never set up a civil government. It was this revenge which ultimately resulted in his downfall. Without a body of regulatory administrative laws, his kingdom lacked stability and body.

At Nanking he erected a magnificent palace for himself, to which he retired with 300 female attendants and 80 wives. No one was permitted to see him except these females and a handful of titled generals. He let his generals plunder as much of China as they could and bring their riches back to Nanking.

It took until 1864 for his movement to be brought to an end, following joint military action against him by Manchu imperials and the foreign armies of the British, French and Americans. It was in this final struggle that the "Ever-Victorious Army" and its leaders, Frederick Townsend Ward and Charles "Chinese" Gordon, achieved their fame.

The Western powers had just completed a successful war against the Manchus, and while they exacted many concessions, these could not be realized so long as the Taipings existed. Finally in July, 1864, Nanking fell, and all the Taipings were put to the sword. The Tien Wang escaped this fate by swallowing goldenleaf.

At the turn of this century, for hundreds of miles in China the destruction caused by the Taipings had not yet been repaired. Whole provinces were impoverished. Some cities, like Hankow, have never recovered. At Anhwei there is still talk of how parents and grandparents resorted to cannibalism during that period in order to remain alive.

And all this could have been avoided if this one man had passed a civil service examination.

Australia-U. S. 'Rift' Is Chiefly Politics

By Gordon Tait

SYDNEY, Dec. 4.—Australians still look on Uncle Sam as a good friend in peace and war.

There has been a lot of talk lately in the Australian Parliament about a strain in diplomatic relations between the United States and Australia. But this has passed right over the average Australian's head. He doesn't believe it is true; neither does United States Ambassador Myron M. Cowen nor the Australian government.

The strained relations statements all come from members of Parliament politically opposed to the Labor Government. The opposition speakers apparently sought to underline what they regard as clumsy handling of the request to the United States for recall of the so-called "Manila girls."

These were the Australian women who left the dominion in 1946 to work as civilian employes of the United States armed forces at Pacific bases. Some went to the United States to work after their jobs in the Pacific ended. The Australian government, asking their return, said the United States had broken an agreement by not repatriating them.

(In Washington, State Department officials said the few Australian girls who came to the United States from their wartime jobs in the Pacific were in the country legally, and so far no stand had been taken on the Australian request.)

Offending Poster

JOHN T. LANG, an Independent Labor member, first spoke of "the impairing of friendly relations with the U. S. A." He said they were weakened by charges of Immigration Minister Arthur A. Calwell that the United States had violated an agreement to return the girls.

The row about the Manila girls died down. Then a week later the attention of Parliament was directed to a poster which compared methods of government in Australia and the United States.

The poster was put out by the Commonwealth Office of Education, a small government office. It showed among other things a wire-pulling political boss operating behind the scenes in American Government.

A Liberal Party member, Joseph P. Abbott, asked that the poster be withdrawn "in view of the present strained relations" with the United States. Distribution was stopped.

In a later interview, Abbott said he believed relations between the United States and Australia had been damaged by recent Australian government actions. He referred particularly to the handling of the request for recall of the "Manila girls," and said "these silly actions leave scars behind."

A Red Angle

UNDERLYING the opposition attacks is the belief that the Australian government is politically vulnerable to charges that it does not combat communism vigorously enough.

One of the opposition's strongest themes is that the Australian government's tolerance of Communists has been responsible for the reported refusal of the United States to give Australia defense secrets.

Immigration Minister Calwell defended in the House of Representatives his demand for the return of the "Manila girls" from the United States. Declaring he was taking his stand on a matter of principle, Calwell said: "I see no reason why I should make it easy for anybody, particularly the representatives of a great power, to escape the obligations which they entered into with the government of this country."

The following day Calwell, answering what appeared to be a prearranged question by a private Labor member, emphasized that Australian relations with the United States are good.

Minister for Defense John J. Dedman told Parliament it is absurd to say relations with the United States are in any way strained.

Government Adopts 'Intern' System of Job Training

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

AFTER years of more or less haphazard job recruitment, Uncle Sam has turned to the college campus in an organized quest for top-level talent in public service.

In fact, he's turned talent scout. A Rockefeller-endowed experimental program by the National Institute of Public Affairs, to find and train youths with exceptional ability for Government careers, showed him how.

The institute is getting out of the talent scout business and Uncle Sam is stepping in. But for at least another 10 months the NIPA will stand by to help.

After 14 years, the mission to interest the Government and select college graduates in each other, and to wed both in a strengthened Federal service, as Britain did long ago, has attained its first objective.

It has "sold" Uncle Sam.

CSC Comes Around

THE other day, Harry B. Mitchell, chairman of the Civil Service Commission, wrote a letter to Dr. Frederick M. Davenport, president of the National Institute of Public Affairs and chairman of the Federal Personnel Council.

Mitchell announced a forthcoming examination for junior management assistant, solicited the attention of qualified college graduates, and disclosed that the commission will follow up with a program of training modeled closely after the institute's own.

This was precisely what the NIPA, endowed with $35,000 a year by the Rockefeller Foundation, set out to accomplish in 1934.

Since then it has combed the universities for exceptionally qualified graduates, brought the cream of the crop to Washington for intensive training in Government administration.

Chairman Louis Brownlow of the institute's board of trustees, called them "interns" in Government service and the name stuck.

Earning While Learning

IN 14 years, 13 separate groups have served a nine-month "internship" in Government. A fourteenth group of interns is now earning while they learn Washington's intricate ropes.

Members of this group passed a Civil Service junior professional assistant examination. The institute regraded them for personality and leadership qualities and found paying Government jobs for them.

They rotate among Federal agencies during the training period, meet top administrators, diplomats, legislators, journalists, visit Congress and the courts. After hours they attend seminars, study economics, government and public administration at American and George Washington Universities.

In a line, they are top-talent understudies for the big Government career jobs of the present and future, but their apprenticeship is only beginning when they finish the training course. Then they become "externs" and are on their own.

Politics As a Sideline

HOW has the "experiment" worked out?

Of the 472 college graduates who have completed the institute's course, a majority are still in the Government service or in closely related nongovernmental public service. Another 13 per cent are taking postgraduate work. Some of the others are planning to combine practice of law with political activities in their local communities.

College graduates trained through NIPA in the early years have not only worked up to more responsible posts; they are boosters of the internship idea and help the institute place and train more recent graduates.

Members of the early groups, with approximately 10 years of Government experience, can be found in such posts as assistant director of civilian personnel in the Army and Air Force Departments; administrative officer of the National Institute of Health of the Federal Security Agency, and the Division of Territories and Island Possessions of the Interior Department; and budget officers with the Atomic Energy Commission and the National Security Resources Board. A member of the second group has recently been appointed assistant director in charge of administrative management of the Budget Bureau.

Legislative Background

DR. DAVENPORT, who served in the New York State Senate and later in Congress, taught political science at Hamilton College, helped found the Maxwell School of Citizenship and Public Affairs at Syracuse University, and now heads the Federal Personnel Council in addition to his duties with the institute, is himself a balanced example of what all-around training in Government can do.

He thinks the results of the 14-year program successfully demonstrate "an effective way of introducing able young men and women into Government administration and into other phases of public affairs."

Perhaps the best proof of this is the extent to which Uncle Sam's many agencies are cooperating with the institute and making their own applied use of the internship idea.

In addition to the Civil Service Commission's Government-wide training program, a number of the Federal agencies are developing training programs to meet their own particular needs.

Indian Office Pioneered

THE Public Health Service is using the internship plan in a basic course on public health administration. The graduate school of the Agriculture Department, in cooperation with the statistical agencies of the Government, has a plan for internships in sampling.

The Office of Indian Affairs, which tried out the idea 10 years ago, is taking steps to organize a new program.

The Army Department is using the internship method to train a group of officers in industrial relations and the Navy Department has recently requested detailed information about the National Institute's selection procedures for use in a study of the method the Navy should adopt to select candidates for the Naval Academy and for officer training programs in colleges and universities.

The State Department made plans to recruit and train 18 interns but was forced by curtailment of funds to proceed on a more limited basis.

Last summer the State Department cooperated with the secretariat of the United Nations in organizing an international internship program which began July 1 and continued until September 3. The International Bank for Reconstruction and Development has just finished selection of seven interns from member nations for training which will begin in January.

The Budget Bureau continues to use the internship principle in supervising the training of foreign government officials sent to the United States to study administrative methods of Federal agencies.

Southern Regional Plan

THE IDEA has spread to many sections of the country. The Coro Foundation has such a program in San Francisco. Three universities in the South have jointly established the Southern Regional Program to prepare young men and women for administrative posts in State and local government in that area. The State of New York and the New York Port Authority each has an internship program and many colleges have applied variations of the idea.

This year it even received legislative recognition. A bill was introduced in Congress providing for creation of a "commission to prepare a plan to enable selected students who desire to actually serve an internship within the Federal service."

But legislation may not be needed. Arrangements worked out with the Civil Service Commission will enable the institute to conclude training operations under the Rockefeller Foundation grant. The Government itself will now take over.

The institute first teamed with the Civil Service Commission a year ago. The NIPA arranged to select its fourteenth group of interns from college seniors and recent graduates who made high scores in the commission's junior professional assistant test.

The institute sent letters to leading colleges encouraging their best students to take the exam. When the scores were in, the institute followed up with its usual questionnaires and interviews to ferret out the qualities it seeks in Government—originality, initiative, integrity, physical vitality, emotional stability, cooperativeness and personal adjustment.

What it discovered was that the Civil Service test was geared to mental quickness, but did not weigh the leadership and personality factors so important in Government. The institute continued to use its personal appraisal method in combination with Civil Service scoring, to gauge top ability.

Inclusive Exam Urged

IN conducting its 1949 junior professional assistant tests, the commission has agreed to rate students on personality factors as well as mental quickness, much as NIPA has selected its own interns in the past, through character appraisals from college professors and personal interviews with top candidates.

The NIPA has asked its own college "talent scouts" to cooperate as fully with the commission as they have with the institute in the past, and has received a willing response. Only note of advice from the colleges is that the commission keep its examination broad gauge enough to attract campus leaders in other than specialized fields.

Two former college "interns" in Government service, Randolph Jenks and Ruth Raup, confer with Dr. Frederick Davenport, president of the National Institute of Public Affairs. Jenks is now management analyst in the Western home office of the Prudential Life Insurance Co., and Miss Raup is a research fellow in intergovernmental relations at the University of Minnesota

Before the institute bows out of the college talent business, it hopes to make sure Uncle Sam will "carry on" these other points in its career training program.

1. Orderly introduction of a given number of select interns in Government each year, with definite commitments from the various agencies.

2. Skillful matching of agency requirements with personal interests of the appointees, to avoid haphazard placement.

3. An adequate Civil Service Commission staff to carry forward the institute's own program of orientation, consultation on personal problems, weekly group meetings, supervised written reports from the trainees and arrangement for educational work through the local universities.

TOMORROW the institute's board of trustees will appraise what has been accomplished in those 14 years, and decide whether Uncle Sam can and will scout out youthful talent as they have, and build a really continuing career service.

Besides Chairman Brownlow, former director of the Public Administration Clearing House, the trustees are:

Robert Woods Bliss, diplomat and consultant to the Secretary of State; Eugene Meyer, chairman of the board of The Washington Post; George F. Zook, president of the American Council on Education; Katherine E. McBride, president of Bryn Mawr College; John Lord O'Brian, lawyer and former general counsel of the War Production Board; Paul H. Appleby, dean of the Maxwell Graduate School of Citizenship and Public Affairs, and Anna Lord Strauss, president of the League of Women Voters.

Record Oil-Seed Crops Boost U. S. Near Normal

By John W. Ball
Post Reporter

FEW IN THIS country appreciate the fortunate situation we are in as to the all-important fats and oils supply as compared with the rest of the world.

There is a world-wide shortage of fats and oils—not as great as two years ago, but still serious. But the United States is about back to normal consumption, although there are still shortages here of certain types.

This is the first of two stories on this subject. The second, dealing with the world situation, will follow next Sunday.

This year's record-breaking grain crops have overshadowed in public attention the country's tremendous increase in production of fats and oils—crops equally as important.

In world trade, the term "fats and oils" includes animal (or fish) and vegetable fats and oils.

Fats and oils enter into virtually every phase of human life. They are necessary in every person's diet; they are important in many other ways. Every man, woman and child in the United States uses almost 70 pounds a year, of which 60 per cent is for food. Another 20 per cent is soap.

This year it is estimated the United States will consume the enormous total of 10 1/3 billion pounds—about the same as last year. Before the war, from 1937 to 1941, the average yearly consumption was 9,647,000,000 pounds. Even with this increase, consumption per capita is slightly less than prewar, due to population increase.

Much Is 'Hidden'

FROM the time a person gets up until he goes to bed at night, he is dependent on oils and fats. When a man shaves, he uses fats in his soap—or perhaps castor oil in his electric razor. He uses fats in his soap when he bathes. He uses fats and oils in his breakfast butter or in the grease for frying his eggs or pancakes.

Of course there are fats in his breakfast bacon or sausage. But those are not figured in the totals of fats and oils. Like the oils left in his cotton or woolen clothing, the fats in all meats, the oil in peanuts or peanut butter, the grease in shoes, etc., they are known as "hidden fats." Although they reach an enormous total each year, there is no definite way to measure them.

The newspapers you read couldn't be printed without oils. Printing ink, though not great in volume, is one of the most important products of fats and oils.

Oils are used in the manufacture of textiles for clothing. Other types are used in many types of building construction. Paints and varnishes must have drying oils such as linseed and tung. Large amounts go into linoleums and oilcloth and insulation materials.

In terms of production, this year's crop of oils is as astounding as our record harvests of grain. Some types of animal fats, for instance, are down from last year because of reduced slaughter of livestock. But our oil-bearing field crops are the largest in history.

War Shifted Balance

THE United States is traditionally a net importer of fats and oils. Before the war we brought in during some years more than two billion pounds a year more than we shipped out.

When the war broke out many of the peacetime sources of our imported oil supplies dried up—particularly the Philippines and East Indies. Olive oil from the Near East, Greece and Italy was shut off; shipments of tung oil and soybeans and such from China, Manchuria and Japan were halted; other types from Asia, Africa and South America were hard to get.

The result was that the United States encouraged oil-bearing crops in this country. In 1942 our exports virtually balanced imports. In 1943 we exported 1,594 million pounds and imported only 929 million—a net export of 665 million pounds. We remained a net exporter in 1944, 1945 and 1946—although in the last year the difference was less than 100 million pounds. This position was made possible through sustained domestic production, rationing and other restrictions, voluntary grease-collections from homes and eating houses, etc.

United States production of fats and oils from domestic materials this year will run about 9.9 billion pounds—about the same as last year. It was only 8.8 billion in 1946 and 8.2 for the five-year average 1937-41. During the war it got up to 10.6 and 10.7 billion in 1943 and 1944. About 1.1 billion pounds will be imported or made from imported materials this year, compared with about 2 billion prewar.

In 1947 imports were about 400 million pounds greater than our exports for that year; this year it is estimated the difference may be less than 100 million pounds.

Philippines Paid Off

THERE ARE several reasons for the postwar shift back to a net import position. A major factor was the remarkable comeback in copra production in the Philippines, and the great need for that item for soaps and other products in this country.

Because of assistance given the Philippines by our Agriculture Department, and because this country had shipping facilities at hand, we got a larger proportion of this increased Philippine production than might otherwise have been granted us under the world-wide allocation system of the International Emergency Food Council—now a part of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

With the vast improvement in the corn harvest this year—1100 million bushels more than in 1947—the production of lard is expected to show a large increase beginning with the fall of 1949. In another year we may again become a net exporter—an unusual peacetime situation.

This country was a net peacetime exporter once before in recorded history—from 1921 to 1924—two years after World War I. This was due to abnormal demand from Germany and neighboring states, whose stocks had been depleted and whose sources of supply had been restricted during hostilities.

Edible Oils Surplus

FATS and oils, in addition to being divided into two classes, vegetable and animal, also fall into two other categories: edible and inedible.

The edible oils produced in this country are butter, lard and rendered pork fat, edible tallow, corn oil, cottonseed, olive, peanut and soybean oils.

The inedible are soap fats and oils (tallow and grease and fish oils) and the drying oils, linseed and tung. There are several minor categories, generally lumped together as "other industrial oils," which include cod and other fish liver oils, many used in medicines.

Although the United States generally has been a net importer of all fats and oils, it has been a net exporter of edible oils in all years of record except the drought years of 1935-37. Lard has always been the leading export item, although in recent years soybean oil and shelled peanut exports have been substantial.

Before the war we imported as much industrial fats and oils as we produced domestically. During the war these imports were severely reduced. But since the war, imports of tung oil, cocoanut oil and copra have recovered to the prewar level. Imports of palm oil and flaxseed and linseed oil are still below prewar.

The shortage of linseed oil, urgently needed for our postwar building program, led the Department of Agriculture in 1946 to guarantee flaxseed growers $6 a bushel for their crops, in order to increase production. Until that time we were at the mercy of Argentina, which virtually controlled the world supply. Prices as high as 32 cents a pound, f. o. b. Buenos Aires, were asked for linseed oil and exports of flaxseed by Argentina were discontinued.

The result is the second largest crop of flaxseed this year in our history—50 million bushels—enough so that some of it is going to export.

An Emergency Source

ONLY THAT portion of our oilseeds crops that is crushed into oil or exported for that purpose is considered in our fats and oils production. Large amounts are consumed as "hidden fats"—as, for instance, peanuts, peanut butter, soybean flour or soybeans used for food.

These "hidden portions" constitute a vast potential source of oil in case of a future emergency, when the Nation is forced to be as self-sustaining as possible.

Here are the amazing figures on this year's oil-bearing crops. These are crop production figures; they do not measure the oil produced from these crops:

Cottonseed: estimated at 6,091,000 tons, compared with 4,681,000 tons last year and a 10-year average of 4,947,000 tons. Cottonseed crushes out about 15½ per cent oil.

Flaxseed: 50 million bushels, contrasted with 40 million last year and a 10-year average of 27 million. Flaxseed crushes out about 19½ pounds of oil per bushel.

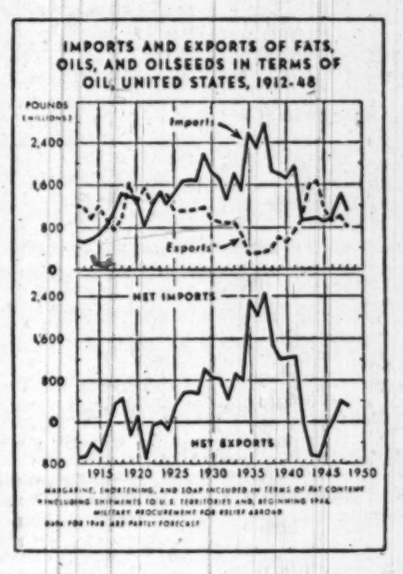
Soybeans: 206 million bushels (an all-time record), compared with 181 million last year and a 10-year average of 135 million. Soybeans produce from 9 to 9.35 pounds of oil per bushel.

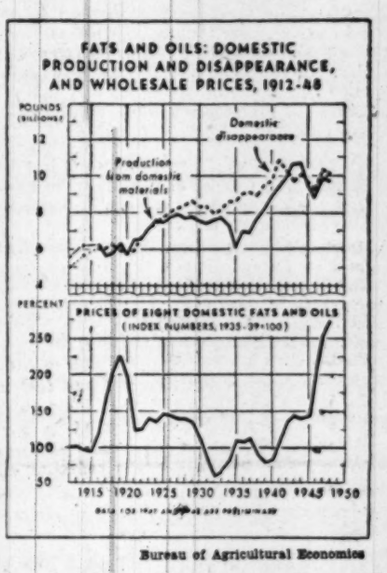
Peanuts: 2294 million bushels (another all-time record), contrasted with 2188 million pounds in 1947 and 1751 million pounds average for the 10 years of 1937-46. Peanuts crush out about 32 per cent oil.

In order to provide for our large domestic demand and to do all we can to alleviate the world shortage of fats and oils, this country has been "living off its fat." Stocks of primary fats and oils were down on January 1 to the lowest point in years.

Our average stocks on January 1 during the prewar years 1937-41 were 2,218 million pounds. On January 1, 1942, stocks were 2,272 million pounds. Last January 1 it was estimated our stocks were only 1,266 million pounds, and predictions are that next January will find us with about the same total.

The great need for fats and oils during an emergency was demonstrated during the war. Today we haven't got that carryover to fall back on, but we have the tremendous increase in production of oil-bearing crops—a great potential.





Bureau of Agricultural Economics

Palm Oil Allocated

THE changes in types of fats and oils imported into this country since prewar days of 1937-41 are many. Prewar imports of cottonseed oil averaged 72 million pounds; last year they were only one million. Prewar olive oil imports were 54 million pounds (including inedible supplies); last year they were only 11 million pounds. In prewar days we imported 16 million pounds of peanut oil; last year we exported 77 million.

We formerly imported about 10 million pounds of sesame oil; today virtually none. We imported about seven million pounds of soybean oil; last year we exported the equivalent of 132 million pounds.

Palm oil imports in prewar days averaged 301 million pounds; last year they were only 63 million. Babassu oil and kernels represented 49 million pounds of imported oil before the war; last year only about 16 million.

Before the war, most of the palm oil imported was used for food, soap and tinplate. Today it is entirely allocated to the steel industry, where it is used in the manufacture of tin and terma plate.

Thanks to the heroic job in the Philippines, our imports of copra in 1947 totaled 854 million pounds in terms of oil; in prewar days it amounted to only 336 million pounds.

Offsetting this, however, is cocoanut oil. In 1937-41 we imported an average of 363 million pounds of cocoanut oil; last year about 24 million.

Flaxseed and linseed oil imports averaged 352 million pounds in terms of oil in 1937-41; last year, under our price support program for flaxseed, our imports dropped to 123 million pounds, and this was brought in before our increased domestic production was available.

Food for Europe

OUR increased flaxseed production last year permitted us to export almost 24 million pounds of linseed oil; before the war our flaxseed and linseed oil exports averaged only 3.3 million pounds of oil equivalent.

(In some countries, Europe particularly, linseed oil is used as food. In the United States only a small amount is used for that purpose.)

Castor oil and castor bean imports before the war were slightly more than 95 million pounds in terms of oil; last year we imported more than 131 million pounds.

Some types of oil imported before the war no longer figure in supplies received from abroad. Among the types and amounts we received where none is being shipped in now are: edible tallow, 3 million pounds; corn oil, 14 million pounds; sunflower oil, 1 million; perilla oil, 29 million pounds; Japan wax (tallow), 3 million pounds; vegetable tallow, 2.7 million, and wool grease, 3 million pounds.

Among our exports, including shipments to United States Territories, the following gains are shown: Lard, prewar, 273 million pounds, in 1947, 416 million; fish oil, from 2.7 to 11 million; cocoanut oil, 33.4 to 61.6 million; tung oil, from 5 to 7.2 million; castor oil, from 1 to 3.4 million pounds.

In manufactured products, we exported 20 million pounds (fat content) of margarine in 1947 against an average of 1.3 million before the war; 10.3 million pounds of shortening against 8 million prewar, and 62.4 million pounds of soap (fat content) against 30.8 before the war.

MAYBE the country is getting cleaner. From 1931 to 1940 the per capita use of fats in soap in the United States jumped from 11 to 13.5 pounds a year; in 1941 it jumped to 16.5 pounds (including military personnel); last year it averaged about 15 pounds.

Translated into terms of soap used, the figures would be:

In 1931 the average American used 25.5 pounds of soap; in 1941 that increased to 29.9 pounds, but in 1947 it decreased to 22.2.

This does not take into consideration large gains in the use of synthetic detergents that take the place of soap. The increase has been marked in the last year.

As in every other commodity, prices are determined by the law of supply and demand in spite of man-made regulations. Because of the world shortage, the index number of wholesale prices of 27 major fats and oils averaged 274 (1935-39 equals 100) in the 12 months ending with September, 1948.

This was moderately higher than in 1946-47, and was the highest of record.

The increase over 1946-47 was due mostly to a rise in butter prices. Reflecting reduced output, the price of 92-score butter at Chicago averaged 79 cents a pound in October, 1947-September, 1948, compared with 70 cents a pound a year earlier.

Changes in prices of other fats and oils were mixed, and in most cases reflected changes in supply. Prices of drying-oils declined more than 10 per cent from 1946-47 to 1947-48. The price of cocoanut oil was materially higher.

Price of lard, domestic edible vegetable oils, inedible tallow and grease averaged about the same as a year earlier. The increased demand for margarine apparently was an important factor in maintaining high prices for cottonseed, soybean and other edible oils despite increased production in 1947-48.

Lard Falls Behind

SINCE the mid-1920's, the price of lard has declined in relation to prices of both cottonseed and soybean oils. This probably was due mainly to an increasing consumer preference for hydrogenated shortening.

Until late 1939, crude cottonseed oil sold consistently at a lower price than lard in tank carlots. In most of 1940 and 1941, however, cottonseed oil was higher than lard. The highest premium over lard was about 2 cents late in 1941. Since the war this premium has averaged 4 cents.

In May and June, 1948, prices of crude cottonseed, corn and peanut oils at mills were 13 to 15 cents a pound above lard in carload lots. In September, 1948, these differences had declined to 2 and 4 cents a pound.

The postwar peak in prices of fats, oils and oilseeds probably has been passed, forecasters of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics report. Bumper 1948 oil crops assure large supplies of vegetable oils for the rest of 1948 and early 1949.

The record corn crop probably will result in a substantial increase in animal-fat production, beginning late next year. Also, world export supplies of fats and oils are gradually increasing.

However, according to the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, no severe decline in prices of fats, oils and oilseeds, like that after World War I, is in prospect. Domestic and export demands are expected to continue strong. Government price supports preclude a major decline in most oilseed prices from the levels of last mid-September.

NEXT SUNDAY: The world situation in fats and oils.

Butter's Use Has Dropped Almost Half

FATS and oils consumption in this country has not kept pace with our increase in population. In the five years 1937-41, the country used an average of 9647 million pounds of fats and oils a year. (These years take in part of the drought period, when production was down.) Last year domestic disappearance amounted to 10,371 million pounds. But the per capita consumption dropped from 70 pounds (fat content) in the 1937-41 period to 69 pounds last year. This year's may be slightly smaller.

The biggest drop in domestic consumption of fats and oils for food is registered in butter. During the war butter was hard to get, and more and more persons changed to oleomargarine. This change came in spite of the fact that Federal laws levy a tax of a quarter of a cent a pound on uncolored margarine and 10 cents a pound on the colored product, in addition to high occupational taxes for manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers.

Also margarine is subject to excise taxes in 18 States ranging as high as 10 cents a pound, in addition to the Federal levy, for the uncolored product, while colored margarine is prohibited entirely in five States.

In 1934 the average American consumed 18.2 pounds (actual weight) of butter. The amount has gone down steadily since, until in 1947 it was only 11.2 pounds. This year it has taken a further drop to about 10.2 pounds.

(Actual weight of butter is about 20 per cent above the fat content, butter averaging 80.5 per cent fat and 19.5 per cent water.)

In the meantime the average person is eating far more margarine. In 1934 he ate only 1.9 pounds of margarine; in 1947 that had jumped to 4.9 and this year it is running at a rate of about 6.4 pounds.

THE LOW-DOWN on fashion is given in—of all places—the Atlantic, and not by a woman, but by one of the influential and brilliant men in the fashion world, Stanley Marcus of the famed Nieman-Marcus store in Dallas.

"As fashion became democratized, the education of the public taste did not keep pace with the production and distribution of merchandise in good fashion," declares Marcus. "Good taste implies a knowledge of appropriateness and an understanding of when and where to wear a garment and what to wear with it." When in doubt, American women are apt to turn to that little black dress, which "has its place," he mourns, "if only it were kept in its place."

Leaders in fashion nowadays are not necessarily the wealthy women, or the ten best dressed. They are the women of taste, whether in college, office or home. An alert retailer can learn a lot from these women, Marcus says.

The job of the retailer is defined as "keeping in time with changing public sentiment." Most of his own worst errors, Marcus confesses, have been those of timing—of introducing or abandoning a fashion too soon. "I misjudged the life span of the fleece coat, the color 'shocking' and the open-toed shoe," he comments.

Also in the Atlantic are two important pieces on the atomic bomb. Now that all hope of outlawing the bomb has died, says Bradley Dewey, the United States must dispel confusion by declaring a wise policy for use of the weapon. Mr. Dewey speaks as president of a chemical company and as former chairman of the guided missiles committee of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He was a member of the evaluation board for the atomic bomb tests at Bikini. David Bradley, M. D., concludes his account of that test, "No Place to Hide," with his own evaluations.

COSMOPOLITAN commissioned Raphael Avellar to visit dozens of night clubs in various cities to discover whether or not they had learned the lesson of the Cocoanut Grove fire in Boston. "The obvious lesson about too many people crowded into a small area without enough clear passages and exits has been learned over and over again at terrifying cost. The more terrifying fact is that the lesson is never remembered."

Even laws such as New York's, which requires submission of floor plans for approval, are fruitless, Avellar found, because aisles which appear on blueprints are effaced by customers who move their chairs back for leg room and by overcrowding for economic reasons. Fire prevention, generally speaking, has been a political football, he adds, "kicked back and forth over the years between the fire and building departments."

What to do about it? "Raise hell with your city officials," warns Avellar.

"Kiss Your Stenographer Goodby," by Don Wharton, also in Cosmopolitan, predicts that the perfected dictating machine will make the stenographer's notebook as quaint a relic as the quill pen today. There's no limit to the uses to which these amazing machines can be put. Some stenographers still balk at using them, Wharton admits, but they are the shortsighted ones. They make the job much pleasanter. Salaries are unaffected.

ONE OF THE most charming stories in a long time is "European Zoos," by Charles J. V. Murphy, in Life. It all started when Murphy encountered Dr. William T. Mann of the Washington Zoo at the Press Center in Munich.

Intrigued by what he describes as "the first friendly and bullish report on Europe uttered by an American since the end of the war," Murphy joined Mann, who was touring European zoos. Dr. Hans Heck, director of the Munich zoo, for instance, Murphy found had rebuilt it by painstakingly breeding the few survivors, despite seemingly insurmountable food problems. A foremost geneticist, Dr. Heck has succeeded in recreating an extinct breed of cow as a result of an experiment lasting 30 years.

In Antwerp, Murphy met Walter van den bergh, who dreamed up the idea of bird cages in which only a wall of light separates the bird from the outside world. Each bird is in a recess fitted out to resemble its native habitat. The passage for spectators is kept dark. "Provide an animal with everything it needs," explained Van den bergh, "food, light, warmth—and it will not voluntarily quit its habitat, especially if the world outside is made to seem dangerous."

OPERATIONS of charity racketeers, "The Meanest Crooks on Earth," are described in Collier's in hair-raising detail by Morton Sontheimer. To get the expose, Sontheimer worked for a group of these crooks who collectively rob the American public of 100 million dollars a year, according to this report.

Sontheimer answered a classified ad for a "telephone salesman, experienced fund raiser, commission." He found a group of men, headed by a boss, who spent all day phoning lists, if they had them, or if not at random from the phone book, soliciting funds for a "church" which pretended to send children to a camp in summer and to raise money for food baskets in winter. There are dealers, he discovered, who sell sucker names at 5 cents a $5 sucker, and on up.

To avoid being a victim of these rackets, check, when in doubt, with the Community Chest, the Chamber of Commerce or the Better Business Bureau. In the case of a religious appeal, you can telephone any known church of the denomination represented, says Sontheimer.

"History on the Auction Block," by Harry Edward Neal in the same issue, describes this city's famed auction house, C. G. Sloane & Co.

A Bikini Scientist Reports

The Atom Just Kissed Hiroshima

By Sterling North

NO PLACE TO HIDE. By David Bradley. Atlantic-Little Brown. 182 pp. $2.

THOSE who understand by what a narrow margin human life is supportable upon this planet are constantly amazed at the preoccupation of mankind in ceaselessly reducing that margin.

We take an idot's delight in destroying irreplaceable topsoil, polluting air and water, raping whole continents of metals, oil and timber. And now with moronic optimism we look forward to an "atomic age"—an age in which the entire planet may become so polluted with radioactivity that the few remaining human beings will have to live constantly encased in lead, wearing Geiger counters instead of wrist watches.

An exaggeration? Read Dr. David Bradley's authoritative and quietly terrifying report on the Bikini tests, those previews of the next war which were practically laughed off by some sections of the press.

Dr. Bradley, one of the many scientists assigned to observe and study radioactivity after the explosions of the two Bikini bombs, believes atomic warfare will be infinitely more terrible than previously imagined because whole areas may be contaminated for centuries if bombs are exploded under water or close to the surface of the earth.

Because of the height at which the bomb was exploded over Hiroshima, the city was soon inhabitable again. For a similar reason the contamination of the target fleet was relatively slight after the explosion of the first bomb at Bikini. But the underwater bomb (explosion No. 2) so thoroughly polluted the ocean sands, the ocean water, the fish, the ships and the atoll of Bikini itself, that life will be dangerous in that region possibly for decades.

The Navy tried soap and water, lye, acid and even blow torches in its attempt to decontaminate the target ships. So far as this book reveals (or the author knows), nothing short of removing whole surfaces can reduce the Geiger count to the safety margin.

Dr. Bradley believes that just as there is no defense against atomic bombs, there is as yet no possible way of decontaminating cities or adequately protecting their inhabitants from the radioactive aftermath of an atomic bombing.

Dr. Bradley is no scaremonger. Neither is he an uninformed fantasist. He is a carefully trained "radiological monitor" who had the unenviable but heroic assignment of flying over Bikini a mere 30 minutes after each of the explosions to register radioactivity with his sensitive instruments.

He continued for many weeks to test the radioactivity of sand, water, human urine, fish and every part of the target fleet and the living fleet at Bikini. As a technician of the Radiological Safety Section, he belonged to the most important service branch in any future war.

He knows the lethal qualities of the alpha particles, the beta particles, the gamma rays and the neutrons released by atomic explosion as few living human beings know them. And he writes almost as well as John Hersey did about Hiroshima.

On his gravestone should be chiseled humanity's epitaph: "Alpha, Beta, Gamma—Omega!"

Hofmanns Aren't Heroic

A Study of the Nazis Through 'Decent' Eyes

The House Without a Roof. By Joel Sayre. Farrar, Straus. 214 pp. $2.75.

IF it behooves us to love our enemies, then "A Bell for Adano" and "Hiroshima" and, to a lesser degree, "The House Without a Roof" must go down as minor modern addenda to the Gospels.

Joel Sayre does not ask us to love all Germans or to love any German indiscriminately. I am certain that he hates concentration camp bullies and erstwhile Nazis as violently as do any but their immediate victims.

But he seems to maintain in this luminous short novel that there are people like the Hofmanns everywhere—decent family people who despise war mongers and war, hate monolithic nationalism and secret police and racial bigotry, and (within the limits of survival) quietly resist the leaders who force us into battle.

Fortunately for the sake of artistry, there is nothing obviously heroic about the Hofmanns. Hofmann himself avoids being drafted into the SS by every device known to medicine, psychiatry and malingering. Hedi Hofmann, the half-Jewish Mischling or "mongrel," in the Nazi parlance, despises Hitler and tries to teach Lilo (her daughter by a previous marriage) to resist the Nazi propaganda forced upon her from kindergarten onward. But she also warns the child never to reveal her strain of Jewish blood.

And Lilo herself does little that is heroic save occasionally to defend other persecuted children. She lives through the war as a dream. And her memories, as told to the "I" character (an American who relates this book), are deeply revealing, but not on an obvious political level.

For instance, she remarks in passing that a certain bridge was hung so thickly with dangling corpses of German deserters

JOEL SAYRE
. . . Very few blind spots that she could seldom see the water during the war. But she mentions this lightly and without horror between other casual remarks.

Things that impressed the child most included a rooster, totally confused by the air raids and fires, who crowed at every bright flash until his annoyed owner wrung the bird's neck.

Not all is German sweetness and light. There is an unforgettable picture of Ley, the drunken sot and labor fuehrer, beating a crucifix to pieces on the footboard of his wife's bed just after she has borne him a daughter. How this brat and bully is put in his place by the nun in charge of the hospital is psychologically convincing.

Only occasionally does Mr. Sayre reveal a blind spot. Unless his examples of Berlin wit are meant as pure irony, he is in danger of being accused of a coarse sense of humor. And those who wish more positive political rebuttal may be annoyed by his avoidance of counter-propaganda.

However, this little novel lives and breathes, even when it seems more like good reporting than good novel writing. It is one of the books which may outlive the more grandiose attacks on war now high on the best-seller lists.

Journalism Prof Whips Up a Dish

EDITOR AND EDITORIAL WRITER, by A. Gayle Waldrop. Rinehart. 450 pp.

THE author of this textbook for journalism students is a University of Colorado professor of what in grown-up circles is known as "newspapering." He has done an extraordinary job of compiling what other people have said about his topic. If any humorous quip or sober article on the problems of getting out a newspaper editorial page has escaped inclusion in this book by some vagrant chance, Professor Waldrop is sure to snare it in the next edition.

For this is first of all a masterpiece of cookery. Take seven pages of solid meat by Charles Merz, editor of the New York Times. Add another fully reprinted article of several pages, quite a bit less formidable, by James M. Cain. Throw in a plentiful amount of spice in the form of shorter quotations from Mr. Dooley, William Allen White, Joseph Pulitzer et al., and ad infinitum. Stir well and strain through a thin mesh of connecting phrases and transition paragraphs. Separate into chapters with titles a sophomore wouldn't be caught perpetrating—and you have this book.

In short—whether for good or ill this reviewer cannot say—the author puts very little of himself into the stew. As a compiler, however, he reveals a great deal of skill. It is no mean accomplishment to string together an endless number of quotations and have the result mean anything. Curiously enough, Professor Waldrop's bouillabaisse comes out a pretty tasty dish, though it may appeal to non-journalistic readers somewhat less than steak and French fries.

As a matter of fact, the book deals with only one aspect, or page, of making a newspaper: the editorial page. But the problems are of more than professional interest, and the reflections on how to deal with them of some of the country's great and not-so-great editors makes this at once a glistening history of American journalism and a critique of its worst faults and best values.—T. Cyrano soared on vials of dew

VOYAGES TO THE MOON, by Marjorie Nicholson. Macmillan. 297 pp. $4.

SCIENCE fiction fans, especially, should enjoy this leisurely space flight into the mists of literature, and they probably will be surprised at how long man has been fancying interplanetary travel. The learned Miss Nicolson, of the Columbia Graduate School, traces the genre back to Lucian, whose moon traveler, Icaromenippus, used one wing of an eagle and another of a vulture. The scientist Kepler resorted to the daemons of superstition for locomotion, but the moon he "visited" about 1600 conformed to the revelations of the telescope and the limitations of science. Francis Godwin used "gansas," or wild swans, to get his hero Gonsales to the moon in the late sixteenth century, and Cyrano de Bergerac, Defoe, Swift and other later "voyagers" borrowed heavily from his fantasy. Cyrano, incidentally, employed the first "jet takeoff" when firecrackers started his "machine" to the moon. Miss Nicolson follows the thread through Francesco Lana's first suggestion of balloon propulsion, in 1670, Defoe's "ambient flame" which forecast gasoline propulsion, "Swift's "Flying Island" and, finally, Lewis Carroll, whose Mein Herr in "Alice" she conceives to be a man from the moon. She dismisses Poe, Verne, Wells and the moderns in an epilogue.

JUST FOR FUN, selected by Elva S. Smith and Alice I. Hazeltine. Lothrop, Lee & Shepard. 328 pp. $2.75.

THIS FAT and unpretentious volume merits a classification very often misused—"For all ages." Certainly the grownups will enjoy rereading Tom Sawyer's chicanery with the whitewash brush, and Alice's remarkable conversation with the caterpillar who smoked a hookah, and such tall tales as Seumas MacManus' "Jack and the King Who Was a Gentleman." And it has been more than rumored that the youngest generation these days never cracks Mark Twain or Lewis Carroll, more's the pity; these may whet the infant appetite. There are other selections from Emily Kimbrough and Washington Irving, Jerome K. Jerome and Charles Dickens. And there are sections of verse and plays.

IN ENGLAND NOW, by Ada Jackson. 24 pp. Macmillan. $1.60.

ADA JACKSON writes in poignant verse of present conditions in England. In likening her work to a sampler, she compares it to one made by her grandmother more than a hundred years ago. Whereas the material of the latter is still bright and gay, hers is already worn and threadbare. From the two pictures she draws, we catch a first whisper of the cracking of British morale. She speaks of "rations in a little hill," of "a land encompassed all about with queues," and of the boy who migrates to South Africa because "This countrys done, worn out and finished, breaking fast." However, in conclusion she avows that "I believe in miracles, I believe in man," and leaves us feeling that England will again see happier days.

TO MAKE THE PEOPLE STRONG, by A. Edward Stuntz. Macmillan. 298 pp. $3.50.

AN AMERICAN newspaperman who has known Latin America since his family moved to Cuba when he was 2, describes our "bread and butter diplomacy" in South America. He is sympathetic with the awakening industrial urge of the Latins, and believes that whatever we invest in public health and educational services there will be repaid materially by their increased purchases of United States goods. Stuntz was director of the Institute of Latin-American Affairs here in 1946-47 and is now with the American International Association for Economic and Social Development in Venezuela. His book contains much of the personal.

BOLITHO has covered much of this ground in his several earlier books on the Victorian era, but here he puts together all of Victoria's life, from her self-willed girlhood to her Golden Jubilee. Her life with Albert, and the tremendous influence he had on her as a woman and a queen, comprise the heart of the book. Even though a twice and thrice-told tale, this biography should be a welcome relief to readers surfeited with the current trend of historical fiction.

COMMERCIAL PHOTOGRAPHIC LIGHTINGS, by Charles Abel. Greenberg. 272 pp. $7.50.

COMPLETE text and diagrams for lighting of some 120 commercial photographic problems, from a picture of a single shoe to an interior of a restaurant. How would you produce an advertising picture of five files? Three 500-watt spotlights and a No. 2 Photoflood, with exact placement and distance, are diagrammed and described.—O. A.

Editor Traces Journalism in San Francisco

GAUDY CENTURY, the Story of San Francisco's Hundred Years of Robust Journalism. By John Bruce. Random-House. 302 pp. $3.75.

IF THIS book had been written last year, or next year, it probably would have been a much better work. In its present form it gives one the uneasy feeling that it was hastily strung up to coincide with California's, and San Francisco's, centennial. It has, for one thing, no index, always an annoying omission in a book of this kind and usually a sign that the thing was thrown together in a hurry; the writing is spotty and mostly careless; and, of top importance, it tells the story of journalists, not journalism.

By which is meant that Bruce has dusted off and repainted a number of hoary tales about San Francisco which have been told before: How editors had at each other with sword and derringer, how the Chronicle was started through the loan of a $20 gold piece, and how the editors of old, even as now, were occasionally about as wrong as you can get (Edward Kemble, editor of the California Star, after not one but two visits pronounced the gold mines "all a sham, as superb a take-in as ever was got up to guzzle the gullible.")

Bruce, a former Hearstling now city editor of the Chronicle, includes here glowing tribute to Paul C. Smith, dynamic young headman of the Chronicle, and to Fremont Older, probably the No. 1 exhibit in the glittery, high-stepping stable of Hearst editorial stock.

The story of journalism in San Francisco since journalism began to count, that is since Hearst entered the field with the Examiner in the early '90s, has been that of a great tug-of-war—the self-styled "monarch of the dailies" hauling one way and the other papers—mostly the Chronicle, with now and then a boost from the Scripps-Howard News—pulling oppositely. The Hearst foothold—he now owns two papers in San Francisco and one across the bay in Oakland—must surely have had a profound effect in the area of the Golden Gate.

(It's quite possible that this is a fatuous statement. Newspaper people like to think they draw quite a bit of water. Whether they do or not becomes a matter of debate at least every four years.)

There is no assessment of this effect in Bruce's book. There is no review of the reasons why Hearst began newspapering as the great champion of the people, then skidded until today his is the voice of darkest reaction. Maybe it was inevitable. Bruce doesn't say.

Bruce's chapter on Henry George, the single-taxer, and his Post is interesting and informative, those on Ambrose Bierce and Joaquin Miller lurid and incomplete, and that on Petey Pigelow, an elegant dandy who interviewed two fugitive holdup men in the high Sierras, very entertaining. His accounts of James King of William and Emperor (Joshua A.) Norton I appear to be routine rewrites.

One can't help wishing some sturdy but stylish digger like Henry Mencken would do a journalistic history of San Francisco.

Faint Praise for U. S. Writers

Red Lecturers Rap Our Authors

By Sigrid Arne
Associated Press Staff Writer

SOVIET teachers have few kind words for American writers—but they also appear to be having trouble making Russian writers walk the tightrope of the party line.

Their attitudes on both literatures are outlined in two pamphlets issued here by the Public Affairs Press.

Both are actual translations of long speeches made in the Moscow Lecture Hall. They were picked for American publication, and translated, by the American Council of Learned Societies, which has embarked on a program of getting actual Russian texts for American students.

The lecture on American literature was given by A. Mendelson, not identified. He names only one living American author, Upton Sinclair, as worthy of marked notice. But he says the United States has contributed much of lasting signficance to world culture.

Omitting first names, he lists the writers of whom he approves: Paine, Jefferson, Franklin, Cooper and Melville, Twain, Whitman, London, Dreiser and Sinclair.

Resents 'Caricatures'

MENDELSON approved Sinclair for his books about Europe—"World's End," "Between Two Worlds," "Dragon's Teeth" and others. Even so, he objected because Sinclair allotted "an extraordinarily small space . . . to the really decisive anti-Fascist forces, the people, the working class."

"Sinclair mentions the Communists only in passing," he says, "and at times he presents them almost as caricatures."

All the way through, this Russian lecturer seems perturbed that no American writer has made a hero of an American "anti-Fascist."

He objects to Eugene O'Neill ("The Iceman Cometh") and to John Steinbeck ("Tortilla Flat" and "Cannery Row").

He says—

Of "The Iceman Cometh": "It creates characters who are organically incapable of fighting for a better world."

Of the two Steinbeck books: "They portray people organically incapable . . . of active opposition to the forces of evil in American life."

He thinks Steinbeck has failed to "recognize the existence of genuine American anti-Fascists." He doesn't say what an "American anti-Fascist" would be.

Martin Flavin's "Journey in the Dark," he says, creates "the greatest interest when it delineates the character of the dried-up, money-grubbing, narrowly egotistic hero."

The book tells of a capitalist who takes a war job and finds friends. The Russian lecturer thought "this attempt to reconcile the unattractive hero with his fellow countrymen . . . is simply absurd."

Lillian Hellman's play, "Watch on the Rhine," gets a low mark because it ignored "the American reactionaries who connived with fascism." The play tells of a wealthy family that came to understand what fascism could mean.

'Poisonous' Mysteries

MENDELSON told his listeners that an enormous part of American book production is devoted to "whodunits" and says they hand out a "poisonous ideological product."

He sums up American publishing today thus:

"Under bourgeois conditions, the predominant class is quick to utilize its success in the realm of production . . . with the aim of the utmost spiritual enslavement of the broad masses."

But the lecturer on Soviet literature, A. M. Egolin, wasn't too happy about the home product. He cited several stories that were "irresponsible." As an example, he told of a story named "Incident Over Berlin."

He describes the plot as follows:

"We see Sergeant Korotov who, as he leaves to carry out an air mission, takes along a bottle of beer. Then follows a description of how the bottle of beer, hidden by Korotov in his flying suit, bursts in midflight, and splinters of glass are driven into his leg.

"The frightened sergeant, believing he is wounded, reports to his commanding officer. When the airplane returns to the airfield the wounded is taken to the hospital, and only there is the whole misunderstanding cleared up."

Egolin thinks "Soviet literature is the most ideological, the most advanced in the world," and says "the work of art is vital and perfect only when it has ideological value."

Praise for Dead

EGOLIN gets a little worked up about a story, "Before Sunrise," written by an M. Zoshchenko. He says it is a "filthy lampoon of Soviet reality," but fails to say what the story is about.

He objects to poets who indulge in the poet's time-honored mood of pessimism or in nostalgia for the past. He objects to one poet who makes no distinction between the patriotism of the Soviet citizen and the Russian of the past.

He objects to a story about an artist who kept worrying about his picture through the "patriotic war," and deplores a story of a horticulturist who worried about his cacti.

He approves of three Russian writers: Pushkin, Tolstoy and Gorky. All of them are dead.

Pabst Tees Off Business Series

The Pabst Brewing Co. By Thomas C. Cochran. New York University Press. 451 pp. Ill. $5.

WITH this volume, the New York University Graduate School of Business Administration inaugurates a series of business histories under the editorship of Thomas C. Cochran, professor of history.

Though business is an integral part of the country's history, it has been little treated by writers—other than in generalized terms. The series, therefore, fills a real need, both for the student of business and the student of history.

The present volume describes, with detachment, the history of the Pabst Brewing Co., one of the oldest of the great brewing companies, from its establishment in the pioneer community of Milwaukee in 1844 to the present.

The records of the early days of the company, founded by a Rhenish family seeking greater economic opportunities, are scanty, and the intimate records of the company today are understandably a business secret, but within these limitations the book is informative as well as readable.—L. G.

Democratic Humor

Cerf Mixes Titters And Locker Guffaws

SHAKE WELL BEFORE USING. A New Collection of Impressions and Anecdotes, Mostly Humorous. By Bennett Cerf. Illus. by Carl Rose. Simon & Schuster. 306 pp. $2.95.

BENNETT CERF differs from Will Rogers in having no Indian blood in his veins, and from Mark Twain in never having piloted a Mississippi River sidewheeler. And there are other differences.

The way to tell him from George Bernard Shaw at a glance is to note the lack of whiskers on anything except his anecdotes.

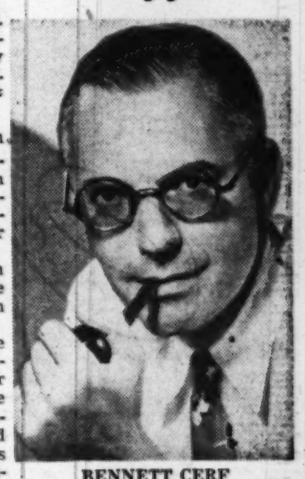
To deal in understatement, he is less catty than Bankhead (Tallulah), more liberal than Astor (Nancy) and far more masculine than the late Woollcott (Alexander). In fact, he is a talented and charming citizen. He owns Random House, the Modern Library and at least a chunk of the old Ogden Reid menage. In addition, he has a mechanic's lien on every story told at any cocktail party in New York or environs.

The secret of his success is the democracy of his humor. Some of the worlds he inhabits never mingle save in Cerf. He can retell a bit of society prattle delicately scented with Chanel No. 5, or clean up a yock (and wry) tainted with the aroma of bar or locker room. In moments of juvenile delinquency he adores the comics, but can switch to an anecdote about Noel Coward faster than you can say "Gertrude Lawrence."

In fact, his interests are as varied as those of a great department store, but being more fortunate than Macy's, he earns a cool 15 per cent net on every turnover. From the bargain basement to the fur salon (where the sables speak only to chinchillas), Cerf peddles humor in every price range.

For instance, try and stop me if you have heard the one about Gene Fowler phoning his editor: "Have I seen the body? I'm sitting on it."

Or the Thurber-Goldwyn controversy over Mitty. Or George Papashvily's remark, "Remember that for Georgians, only too much is never enough." Or Macaulay's response (age 4) to the lady who asked him: "Did oo hurt oo's itty bitty finger?" To which Macaulay replied: "Madam, the agony has slightly abated."



BENNETT CERF
. . . Chanel or liniment

Slightly abated? At this point neither author nor reader is feeling the slightest pain.

These are very unfair examples from a book of anecdotes mostly humorous and mostly unshopworn, which cover the field from Dan to Beersheba and from Alpha to Omega, or, as they say in Cerf's sporting world, from Tinker to Evers to Chance. (Especially Chance.)

And any humorist who can find something (intentionally) funny in the bright sayings of Thomas Mann should be promoted to full partnership with Alfred Knopf.

What a wide, wide universe the gay author inhabits who can draw on Hollywood, Broadway, the front page, the comic supplement, the literary world, magazines, rail road and shipping, sports, society, financial, radio, travel and index for his facetious fabrications.

Happy happy he, who, in this era of the cold war, year 3 of the Atomic Age, can laugh and laugh and publish and publish.

Frankly, I'm envious.—S. N.

A Southerner and a 'Yankee' Review 'Negro in America'

THE NEGRO IN AMERICA, by Arnold Rose. Harper. 325 pp. $3.75.

PROFESSOR ROSE was a collaborator of Gunnar Myrdal of Sweden, in the production of "The American Dilemma," a formidable study of the Negro problem in the United States that ran to 1000 pages of text and 500 pages of footnotes and appendices. Rose has condensed that work to a little more than 300 pages.

Even at this atomic distance from the Civil War, this subject suggests a geographical division of the Nation to many minds. For that reason, The Washington Post has asked a distinguished Northern scholar end educator and a distinguished Southern editor to review Rose's book. The results are presented herewith.

By Hodding Carter

GUNNER MYRDAL'S "An American Dilemma" was a monumental example of dispassionate and illuminating social research. But it presented one great hindrance to wide usefulness. There was so much of it that the average and even above-average reader was frightened away.

So "An American Dilemma" failed to reach more than a relative handful of those among whom the classic study of the American Negro might have wrought profound changes in beliefs and attitudes.

This condensation by Arnold Rose, one of Myrdal's two principal assistants, removes this hindrance without sacrificing any important detail. Additionally, it brings up to date the changes in America's racial thinking—including the South's—since 1942.

A note of hopefulness was present in the original. It is even more evident in "The Negro in America." The American dilemma persists, the conflict between the treatment of the Negro and the American creed, based upon the dignity of the individual, the equality of all men, and the American assumption of inalienable rights to freedom, justice and fair opportunity. But even since 1942 there is evidence that the dilemma is slowly being resolved.

Hodding Carter, who was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing in 1946, worked his way up through the sole-killing grind of newspapering, but he did it fast. A reporter on the New Orleans Item-Tribune in 1929, he was UP night bureau manager at New Orleans in 1930, AP bureau manager at Jackson, Miss., in 1931-32, and before the latter year ended he had started a paper of his own, the Daily Courier, at Hammond, La., his birthplace.

MR. CARTER

Carter nursed the Courier through a precarious infancy, but he also fought Huey Long, as he later fought Bilbo. Long finally got around to him, cut off his legal advertising, and Carter sold out in '36. He bobbed up again almost immediately, but across the State line, in Greenville, Miss., where he started the Delta Star. Within two years he absorbed the rival Democrat-Times and its name, and the Greenville Democrat-Times is still his principal forum, despite a close financial shave during his nearly five years' Army service. (He emerged a major.)

Carter received a Neiman fellowship at Harvard in 1939, a Guggenheim fellowship for creative writing in 1945 and the Southern Literary Award in the same year. He is the author of "Flood Crest," "The Winds of Fear," "Lower Mississippi," and, with Col. R. Ernest Dupuy, "Civilian Defense of the United States." He is 41.

Excellent Ammunition

PERHAPS the very slowness is explained by one sentence from this study: "The simple fact is that an educational offensive against racial intolerance, going deeper than the reiteration of the 'glittering generalities' in the Nation's political creed, has never seriously been attempted in America."

The reading of this book could make a proper beginning for such an offensive. I don't know the formula for getting it into enough hands; but there are a multitude of study clubs, there are many thousands of college students, perhaps many high school students and even politicians who would find its logic useful and revealing and reassuring.

And there is a present, compelling need for wide awareness of one important set of findings which, on the basis of the evidence, cannot be challenged. Dr. Rose restates Myrdal's decisive conclusion that the Negro ranks objectionable discriminations in parallel but opposite order to those discriminations upon which the white American—and particularly the Southerner—insists.

The Negro wants first an end to discrimination in earning a living. Next he objects to discrimination in law courts and by police. Next comes political disenfranchisement, and then segregation and discrimination in public facilities. Of only "distant and doubtful interest" are the "social equality" taboos against personal relationships and intermarriage.

Since the white order of discriminations is exactly opposite, it becomes apparent that there can be a meeting ground in such primary Negro goals as job equality, legal justice and enfranchisement. This is the point that ought to be hammered home by those who read "The Negro in America" and those who act in the interests of the American Negro. It is simply a restatement not only of putting the attainable first, but of putting first things first.

This, seemingly, has been lost sight of in the rising controversy that is affecting human relations in the United States today.

Epigrammatic Writing

BUT to single out this one contribution, however important, is to minimize the scope of "The Negro in America." The new title is in itself misleading, for there is much about the white man, particularly the Southern white man, and his historically submerged envirnoment. Nothing remotely related to the American race problem escaped either the original study or what might be described contradictorily as this abbreviated elaboration. Here is the historical background, the sad folklore of racial antipathy, the making of economic discrimination, political and social motivations and practices and the Negro community in conflict.

This book is encyclopaedic. Its table of contents lends itself to ready reference. But it is not dully encyclopaedic in its presentation. Instead its succinctness has the brilliance of epigram and the penetration of the all-seeing eye. I cannot help but pass on a few examples, worthy of memorizing:

"America is, as we shall point out, conservative in fundamental principles, but the principles conserved are liberal, and some indeed are radical."

"Because of this (Southern aristocratic) tradition, a main way to get and remain rich in the South has been to exploit the Negroes and other weaker people, rather than to work diligently, make oneself indispensable or have brilliant ideas."

"The correct belief that the Negro is inferior was tied up to the correct belief that man belongs to the biological universe, and, by twisting logic, the incorrect deduction was made that the inferiority was biological in nature."

"Taking the long historical view, the main observation to be made about Negro migration is that the Negro people have tended to stay where they were."

"When work becomes less heavy, less dirty or less risky, Negroes are displaced."

"The issue of 'white supremacy' versus Negro domination, as it is called in the South, has for more than a hundred years stifled freedom of thought and speech and affected all other civic rights and liberties of both Negroes and whites in the South."

"No Yankee will be so tactless as to mention it in so many words, and no Southerner can afford to admit it, but the main thing happening to the South is that it is becoming Americanized."

"Even political discrimination against the Negro is haphazard and accidental in this romantic and individualistic region."

"The Southern liberal, having to be critical of the South, has to emphasize strongly his local and regional patriotism."

"As Negro institutions are improved and increasingly manned exclusively by Negro professionals, segregation is undoubtedly being strengthened in America. Powerful Negro vested interests are thus created."

The Other Foreigners

THESE are random samplings. It should not be concluded therefrom that "The Negro in America" has only a haphazard brilliance. It is an integrated, purposeful book and its antistrophic emphasis upon the American creed is more timely than ever. Let us not forget that Gunnar Myrdal was not an American, but a Swede, a foreigner though a friendly one. There are other foreigners, for whose allegiance we vie today with communism.

And it is with these other foreigners—a billion and a half yellow and brown and black people—that the closing paragraphs of "The Negro in America" are concerned. Says Dr. Rose in conclusion:

"Until recently, what the colored peoples thought of us did not make much difference. Now it has become of crucial importance . . . Much of the future lies in Asia and Africa. These are new nations whose period of greatest growth lies ahead of them . . . If we are to live at peace in the world (and peace may mean having these great colored nations as our allies), we will have to win them by ideas and not by force. Today, as always, the ideals of the American creed, the ideals of freedom and equality, if lived up to, are our strongest tools in building the international future."

By Robert K. Carr

IN 1944 a study of the Negro problem was published in this country which quickly took its place as one of the great books of our time. Its title was "An American Dilemma," and its author was Gunnar Myrdal.

Actually this work was the product of a remarkable social science research project that enlisted the services of a large number of the Nation's foremost students of race relations. The project was sponsored by the Carnegie Corporation and its direction was placed in the hands of Professor Myrdal, one of Sweden's greatest scholars, as "someone who would approach his task with a fresh mind, uninfluenced by traditional attitudes or by earlier conclusions."

The 1944 publication ran to two volumes and included forty-five chapters covering more than 1000 pages of text and 500 pages of footnotes and appendices. It was so scholarly that it actually had footnotes to footnotes! Incomparably the greatest work on the Negro problem, it was a formidable set of volumes that could not hope to attract the general reader.

While this original edition sold more than 30,000 copies, and has had a profound influence upon all subsequent thinking, writing, and action with respect to the Negro problem, its circulation was largely limited to students and specialists.

Now Arnold Rose, professor of sociology at Washington University in St. Louis, and one of two men who served as Myrdal's top collaborators in the original work, has prepared a mere 300-page condensation of the 1944 volumes. This small book, entitled "The Negro in America," should have a wide circulation and bring the essential data and conclusions of "An American Dilemma" to a much wider audience than has hitherto been reached.

The condensation is an excellent one. In a foreword to the new volume Myrdal, himself, writes, "no significant point of view, body of facts, or main conclusion is left out." It is perhaps true that something of the exciting and dramatic quality of the original work has been lost; one does not have the same feeling of having come up against a truly great work of research and writing which one inevitably had in reading the earlier edition. But that is one of the prices of a "condensation," and Mr. Rose's volume is a masterly job of presenting the essence, if not the full spirit, of the Myrdal work. It cannot fail to prove valuable in the days ahead as America attempts to resolve its great "dilemma," as surely it must.

Remarkable Agreement

I HAVE BEEN impressed as I have read Professor Rose's book (and I found that it inevitably sent me back to the earlier work to reread many passages of the more detailed analysis that one finds there) by the close similarity between the Myrdal study and the report of the President's Committee on Civil Rights in scope, treatment of subject matter, and particularly in the spirit of the conclusions. Of course, Myrdal was one of the most valuable single sources available to the Civil Rights Committee in its labors, and the resemblance between the two works is more than merely coincidental.

But the committee had its own independent sources of original data and the Myrdal study played no direct part in influencing the committee's studies or conclusions. Those identified with the undertaking, committee members and staff alike, were much too busy absorbing the mass of fresh evidence and information brought to their attention to read carefully the ponderous tomes of the Myrdal study. Thus, to me the large area of agreement between these two studies—each a cooperative research project involving a large number of persons who in each case had resources and information well beyond what is usually available to scholars—is most impressive.

To begin with, both groups place their studies—in one instance of the Negro problem, in the other of the broader problem of the civil rights of all minorities and of all people—in the context of the "American Creed" or the American way of life. To Myrdal, the American "dilemma" is found in the gap between our principles and our practices, between our tradition of democracy, liberty, equality, the dignity and importance of each human being and the second-class citizenship to which we have assigned the Negro. The President's committee refers again and again in its report to the fundamental soundness of our traditions with respect to freedom and individual liberty and to the way in which we endanger those traditions by discrimination against minority elements in our society.

It may be said that two of the most important conclusions reached by the Civil Rights Committee in the over-all sense are: (1) Racial segregation as a way of life cannot endure in America, and (2) Government—particularly the Federal Government—must and should use its legislative powers to bring about the eventual elimination of segregation as well as the broader result of the safeguarding of the civil rights of all people. Both of these conclusions are, of course, exceedingly controversial and they have been bitterly attacked by many people. Both conclusions are, however, very carefully reasoned in the committee's report and one cannot help but wonder how many of the critics have given the report the benefit of an equally careful reading.

I do not wish to imply that having so read the document no reasonable person can find himself in disagreement with the case it presents. But, as one who had a part to play in the committee's work, who came to the undertaking with few prejudices or conclusions—indeed, perhaps with too little experience with, or knowledge of, the Negro problem—I am now impressed by the extent to which almost every set of data and arguments used by the President's Committee to buttress its conclusions is paralleled by similar data and reasoning in Mydral.

Robert K. Carr, a youthful 40, is Joel Parker professor of law and political science at Dartmouth. He was born in Cleveland, and holds an A.B. from Dartmouth and an A.M. and a Ph.D. from Harvard.

While working for his doctorate, Carr joined the University of Oklahoma in 1931 as a member of its department of government and director of its bureau of municipal research. One of his several books, "State Control of Local Finance in Oklahoma," resulted from his work at that period.

In 1937 Carr went to Dartmouth College as a member of its department of government, and in the years since he has found time for such civic and political activities as chairman of the Hanover, (N. H.) Democratic Committee and member of the Hanover School Board.

Carr's outstanding public service has been as executive secretary of President Truman's Committee on Civil Rights in 1947, to which he refers in his review. He is also the author of "Democracy and the Supreme Court" and "The Supreme Court and Judicial Review." He is a member of the American Political Science Association, Phi Beta Kappa and Chi Phi.

BOTH STUDIES reject utterly one of the arguments now being advanced against Government support of civil rights to the effect that you cannot change human nature by legislation; that "laws cannot change folkways." Both studies point out that from the beginning of recorded history the course of human affairs has been altered and controlled by law; that while human nature may not be altered by law, human conduct has by law again and again been successfully bridled in the interest of the general welfare.

Two other points at which the two studies run parallel courses may be noted. The first of these is the case for Federal leadership in the attack upon racial discrimination. One of the things that led the President's Committee to favor such leadership was its belief that a nation should always employ the superior moral tone of the large society in dealing with problems that arise largely out of the wayward conduct of parts of the society.

The committee was convinced from its reading of American history that as a national people we have always shown a deeper understanding of the free way of life and a firmer regard for civil rights than we have shown as people in separate States and communities. And the committee concluded that it would be folly not to put that superior moral tone of the Nation at large to work in dealing with such a deeply serious problem as race relations or civil rights generally.

Myrdal says, "In their formal organizations . . . people invest their highest ideals." What is our greatest formal organization in America if not the national government, and where else can we find ideals as high as have been expressed through that government from the time of the Founding Fathers?

Neither Myrdal nor the President's Committee rejects the importance of the long, slow attack upon the race problem that can and must be made by way of education and social reform—that social reform which through public housing, public medicine, full employment, and the like, seeks to relieve the pressures that make for racial rivalry and antagonism. Moreover, both agree that no responsible person can demand the elimination of racial segregation overnight. But both are obviously concerned by the limitations which are imposed upon the solution of our race problem by the factor of time.

The World Is Watching

IN PARTICULAR, and this is the second point of similarity, both are troubled by the extent to which America's race problem has become an international issue. Admittedly we are confronted today by a world in revolution. Beyond any doubt democracy and communism are the two great ideologies of the world revolution which are competing for the loyalties of people everywhere—above all for the allegiance of the peoples of the backward areas of the earth, the peoples of Asia, Africa, the Indies, and South America. And anthropologists estimate that two thirds of the world's population is "colored."

In the face of this world crisis, greater perhaps than any earlier one in history, can America risk failure to set its house in order? Can we wait for the slowest community, or the most backward State, to guarantee civil rights to black as well as white? Can we fail to recognize that irresponsible action by some of our people can do the gravest sort of damage to all of us? Can we limit our collective, national effort to education or to social reform without simultaneously mounting a direct, frontal attack upon racial discrimination itself? Can we fail to see that it is later than you think!

One cannot do better than to turn to the words of Myrdal on this matter of the race with time to persuade Negroes, Orientals, Hindus, Indians—colored people everywhere—that democracy is the greatest political way of life yet devised by man and that it can be made to work. He says, ". . . empty declarations only deepen cynicism. Deeds are called for. If America in actual practice could show the world a progressive trend by which the Negro became finally integrated into modern democracy, all mankind would be given faith—it would have reason to believe that peace, progress and order are feasible. And America would have a spiritual power many times stronger than all her financial and military resources—the power of the trust and support of all good people on earth. America is free to choose whether the Negro shall remain her liability or become her opportunity."

Balancing the Books

By Lee Grove

INSPIRED BY A RUMOR that Stefan Heym's "The Crusaders" was selling like hotcakes around town, the Balancing-the-Books operative launched a mild and unscientific inquiry.

After talking to a number of booksellers, he came to the conclusion that the rumor was a rumor. Norman Mailer's "The Naked and the Dead" was selling by far the best, the booksellers said, with Irwin Shaw's "The Young Lions" in second place and "The Crusaders" running third, so far third as almost not to be in the race at all, according to some.

Opinions of the booksellers varied considerably, it was found. One described "The Young Lions" as "a flop," and another said "The Naked and the Dead" was a man's book, to which still another said, "Most of our customers are women and Mailer's book is outselling the others." "The Crusaders" has its champions, he reported, a little confusedly, and "The Young Lions" is accused of a lack of character development.

Yeets or Yates?

IN A discussion of Richard Ellman's absorbing biography, "Yeats, The Man and the Masks," at lunch the other day with Bruke Wilkinson and visiting Tom Hunnewell of Houghton, Mifflin, the question of how the Irish poet's name was pronounced came up.

I said that George Russell (AE), friend and fellow poet of Yeats, had once told me it was pronounced to rhyme with "Keats." Hunnewell, who is something of a student of Yeats, said he had always heard it pronounced "Yates."

Wilkinson, who attended the unveiling of a portrait of the poet in the wardroom of the Irish corvette Macha in September, when it returned from the Riviera bringing Yeats' body home for reburial in his native land, said he also heard it pronounced "Yates."

AE should have known, but sometimes there is more than one right answer. Did Yeats pronounce it both ways?

Wilkinson, who is busy in his K st. office working on a new novel, is pleased that without premeditation on his part his first novel, "Proceed at Will," is being constantly compared to the work of the late John Buchan.

The similarity, first noted in The Washington Post, has been remarked by Joseph Henry Jackson in California, and others. In England, Hodder & Stoughton, who are publishing the book there early in 1949—it is also being published in Sweden — are grooming Wilkinson for the role. H. & S. asked Wilkinson to rewrite one or two of the racier passages in "Proceed at Will," because "Lord Tweedsmuir never would have allowed that to happen!"

Our Finest Painter of Indians

Catlin Story a Rebuke to U. S.

Pursuit of the Horizon: A Life of George Catlin. By Lloyd Haberly. MacMillan. 239 pp. $5.

IT IS A tragic fact that even today only a few hundred American specialists are aware of the disgraceful neglect awarded George Catlin by his rich and careless country.

Catlin was by all odds the finest painter of American Indians who ever visited 48 major tribes in their unspoiled, primitive surroundings.

He was the most persuasive single crusader for a decent Indian policy during the second quarter of the nineteenth century, when a greedy, westward-lunging Nation was happily debauching, swindling and massacring the original owners of the continent.

Loyd Haberly, who has written a distinguished book on Catlin, does not say so, but America's neglect of Catlin, like its neglect of the Indians he defended, is in part due to a guilty conscience.

Sigmund Freud had a valid explanation for that sort of forgetfulness. We try to submerge that which is painful for us to recall.

The result: one can only see Catlin's superb work by digging through the packing boxes at the Smithsonian and one or two other institutes and galleries.

Showed Early Talent

BORN in Wilkes-Barre, in Pennsylvania's then wild Wyoming Valley, in 1796, George was educated there and at Lichfield, Connecticut, where he studied law and the classics under such distinguished teachers as Judge Tapping Reeve and his young partner, James Gould. Even in those days he showed startling talent as a self-instructed painter.

Always romantically defensive toward the American Indians (since a dramatic childhood experience with a red-skinned hunter and his family), Catlin was as eager as Parkman to study Indians in their native habitat and suffered as many tortures as the historian in his lonesome travels into the upper Missouri River country.

LLOYD HABERLY
. . . Doesn't fix blame

Befriended in St. Louis by Gen. William Clark, "who ruled the vast West from Canada to Mexico and from Mississippi to the Pacific," Catlin was given free run of the whole region and had the inestimable adventure of living with the Mandans and drawing and reporting their weird and ferocious ceremonial rights before disease virtually wiped out one of the most interesting of the Indian tribes.

In Schoolcraft's later controversy with Catlin over those ceremonials, Catlin had the advantage of first-hand information; Schoolcraft nothing but second and third-hand reports with which to discredit the painter.

To promote the Indian cause (and incidentally his own art), Catlin opened the first "Wild West show" with paintings, Indian costumes and later live Indians and grizzly bears. Despite success in Cincinnati, New York City, Washington, D. C., and London, he was usually in desperate financial straits. Callow politicians continually defeated Webster, Clay and other admirers of the artist who wished to have the Government buy and preserve Catlin's priceless collection as a step toward enacting the painter's brave, honorable and merciful Indian policy.

A Deathbed Lament

AFTER the death of his wife and foreclosure on his collection, Catlin lived in periodic distress and self-imposed exile in Paris and Brussels, made incredible pilgrimages through the wilds of South America, once again visited his beloved West and tried, through the publication of new books and the exhibition of new collections of paintings, to make a comeback.

He died in neglect and great pain, crying out twice in his last hours: "What will become of my gallery? What will become of my gallery?

Americans can do three things to make belated restitution. They can buy and read this absorbing book. They can insist that Catlin's paintings be put on display at the Smithsonian. And they can demand of their Congressmen that the United States Government recast its present insulting and pauperizing policies which have made reservation Indians a caricature and mockery of the tribes Catlin knew as a young man in the West.

The shade of George Catlin among his lost Mandans will not rest until an awakened America begins to prove its often-boasted virtues of justice and mercy to weaker nations—including the "nations that once inhabited our Western plains.—S. N.

Shaw 'Family Album' Includes Intriguing Shots by G. B. S.

BERNARD SHAW THROUGH THE CAMERA, selected by Dr. F. E. Loewenstein. B. & H. White Publications London. 15/.

TO THE vast Shavian bibliography add a fascinating well-printed collection of 238 photographs, some from his own collection, some from his own cameras. The slim volume of pictures has been selected and "introduced" by his watchdog of the last 15 years, Frederick E. Loewenstein.

The pictures include family portraits, studies by such great photographers as London's Baron and Ottawa's Karsh and many informal snaps. As a supplement to one's Shavian shelves, they're remarkably enlightening—a superb study of Ellen Terry in 1883 (what gorgeous eyes!); an intriguing shot of Mrs. Patrick Campbell in bed, taken by G. B. S. himself; views of his little-photographed wife; a group shot with De Walden, William Archer, James Barrie, G. B. S. and G. K. Chesterton as cowboys; a few shots, too, of his youth, though he was never photographed until he was 18.

Compiler Loewenstein has been curiously abandoned in his editing. There is some chronology at the beginning and end of the book, almost none in between. He slides about helterskelter through the years. His caption lines are often sloppy. He troubles himself to identify Albert Coates as "the well-known conductor," Helen Keller as "the famous American blind deaf mute."

He goes to some length to explain a picture with the Gene Tunneys and "the great German surgeon who arrived miraculously in Brione just in time to save her life when Gene prayed for Divine aid." But, though the doctor is in the picture, Loewenstein doesn't give his name.

If you're a true Shavian, all this won't matter, for the pictures are best viewed as supplements to the oft-biographied Oracle of Ayot St. Lawrence.

Did Paul Revere Swipe Engraving?

IS ONE of America's most famous engravings a forgery?

According to evidence unearthed by James Thomas Flexner, author of a new biography, "John Singleton Copley" (Houghton Mifflin), Paul Revere received an engraving of the Boston Massacre from Henry Pelham, who was a student of the painter Copley. Revere, who was sometimes as sharp as one of his own engraving tools, issued copies of the engraving as his own and it has come down through the history books as the most famous patriotic American print.

Pilgrim Axes Rang Knell of Million-Mile Forest

By George A. MacDonald
Agriculture Department Forest Service

WHEN the Pilgrim Fathers disembarked from the good ship Mayflower on December 21, 1620, finally landing on Plymouth Rock about 38 miles southeast of what is now Boston, they found themselves on the fringe of a heavy, unbroken forest. Though they didn't know it, this forest extended inland over more than a million square miles.

Today, 328 years later, a little more than 5 per cent of that original American forest remains, what's left being confined to redwood groves and old Douglas fir stands in the Pacific Northwest and to cypress trees in the Florida swamps.

Old records and writings, studied in the light of subsequent surveys, indicate that around 1620 this vast original woods contained about 8125 billion board feet of sawtimber, or trees of the size and species required to make lumber and building timbers. The latest United States Forest Service appraisal, recently completed, revealed total sawtimber stands of only 1600 billion board feet, most of it in trees that started life years after the Mayflower rounded Cape Cod.

How long the "ancient forest" had clothed the country before the white man came nobody knows, but it was doing all right. Growth and drain were in balance, so that its volume and extent remained about the same; wildlife was plentiful, and the woodland streams ran clear and sparkling.

Fire Was a Weapon

INDIANS, some of whom peered curiously from behind the tree trunks at the new arrivals, had lived and hunted in these woods for generations and in the judgment of foresters had done them comparatively little harm. Except when he set fire to the trees to confound his enemies, it appears that the red man was much more careful with fire in the forests than the white man. Nor was he inclined to clear the land and establish an estate.

Research studies indicate that the Indians cleared for agricultural and other purposes only about 500,000 acres east of the Mississippi. Outside of his general dislike of work, one reason why the red man cut down so few of the trees was that there were always big "sticks" that had grown old and toppled over, thus providing him with ample logs for his canoes, stockades, such housing as he occasionally wanted, and fuel.

Another reason was that logging and clearing were women's work, and bringing down the forest giants, particularly the huge hardwoods in the valleys, without tools was too much for even the most docile squaw.

With the Pilgrims and the Puritans, it was another story. On the one hand, the dense, dark woods provided cover for the lurking red men and preying beasts. On the other, cleared land was needed for villages and cabins, for pasture and for growing corn. Logs were needed, too, for homes and meeting halls.

The great trees were thus a menace and an obstacle, as well as a godsend without which these Pilgrims might never have been able to stick around for that first Thanksgiving one year after they landed. In any event, with fire and ax they immediately set to work to push back the boundary of the big trees.

Forest Monarchs, Then

WHAT strength and endurance this job demanded can't be fully realized by looking at the forests we have today. Our modern woods, having come in almost entirely after the "ancient forests" were cut, are much smaller and poorer in quality. For one thing, farmers and others cleared the most fertile sites, leaving to the trees the poorer soils. For another, the new woods had to struggle always against the white man, with his repeated cuttings and his repeated fires.

As to the size of the old forests, the record tells of woods in New York, Pennsylvania and New England that were made up of white pines more than 200 feet high and up to 7 feet in diameter, and of hardwoods such as beech, birch and maple from 4 to 7 feet through and more than 100 feet in height. Very few and far between, single specimens of such proportions may be seen today. But old writings tell of "tracts in dense hardwoods where the great trunks stood so close together that a yoke of oxen could not be driven between them."

There is record, too, of northern pine stands running from 60,000 to 100,000 board feet per acre, and while this was probably well above the average the fact is that the average northern pine stand today "cruises" from 3000 to 10,000 board feet per acre.

Nor did the toiling Pilgrims have any equipment to be compared with the powerful "cats," trucks, power saws and other machinery which are used now. Logs had to be hauled by oxen over makeshift roads, and though a few water-powered sawmills were set up the bulk of the lumber, floor boards and stanchions had to be handsawed.

As usual with white men, the biggest logging operations were done in connection with war. This was the business of getting out masts for the British navy's "ships of the line," which had to be 40 inches in diameter and 120 feet tall. Lesser trees were cut for the settlers' cabins and fuel. The huge hardwoods on the rich soil of the bottomlands were girdled and burned; thousands of wild fires were permitted to destroy timber which the settlers could not possibly use and wanted out of the way.

Steam Cut a Swath

BY 1700 there were about 500,000 white settlers along the Atlantic Coast, and the puny inroads on the old Eastern sawtimber begun by the Pilgrims were beginning to assume substantial proportions. But even so, foresters have estimated that only about 15 per cent of the timber had been used and destroyed by the end of the eighteenth century.

The big drive on the trees began with the introduction of steam power and railroads after 1830 and continued during the enormous westward land-clearing operations that reached their peak around 1850.

By 1900, according to forestry experts, about 90 per cent of the original sawtimber had been removed, the loggers and the land clearers having devastated the primeval sawtimber of New England, New York and Pennsylvania, as well as much of that in the Lake States and the South. In the wake of the clearers and loggers, however, lay the broad farms and the burgeoning cities of the new Nation which the old timber did so much to build and to house.

Now, the loggers are at work on the last of the original sawtimber stands in the Pacific Northwest; word comes that the last of the Florida cypress is being logged. The 822 million acres of land that was in sawtimber—save for lakes, streams, swamps and natural bare spots—when the Pilgrims landed, has been reduced to 462 million acres of "commercial" forest land.

This is land not suitable for farming, not wanted for settlement or cities but seemingly set aside by nature for growing timber, protecting the Nation's water sources, housing wildlife and giving man a chance now and then to get away from his "madding" cities.

New Crops Are Lean

BUT IF this were Nature's intention, she is not having her way. Of this "commercial" forest land, all but 100 million acres has been cut over one or more times as successive crops of young trees have come in. This cut-over land—on which the Nation must some day depend for most of its sawtimber—is now growing, over-all, only a fraction of the timber that it could produce, while 77 million acres of it has been so heavily cut and burned that only sparse, inferior growth is slowly, very slowly, reclaiming the soil.

The Nation's sawtimber—old and new growth—is being cut on the whole 50 per cent faster than it is growing; and, according to the recent reappraisal by the Forest Service, "the increasing difficulty of obtaining timber, especially in the North and South, makes it unlikely that the forest industries could go on for another two decades at the 1944 rate of output."

As the Pilgrims faced the necessity of removing the forests, it now appears that modern America faces the necessity of putting them back on most of her 462 million acres of "commercial" forest land. At present, protection and management directed toward keeping forests growing and reasonably productive is being practiced on only about one third of this acreage, including that in national, State and local forests, and in the hands of a growing number of big timber operators interested in staying in business.

The immediate problem is how to extend this management to the remainder, especially the small holdings of some 4,200,000 owners which total 261 million acres and average 62 acres. What is needed, as one forester said, is the spirit, courage and cooperation of the Pilgrim Fathers, devoted not to forest removal but to restoration.

Hauling cypress out of the Everglades, one of the last stands of the "ancients "forest" that was here when the Pilgrims landed

New Damp Trend

25 Millions Still Dry, 15 Years After

By Alexander R. George
Associated Press Staff Writer

NATIONAL prohibition ended 15 years ago today, but the dry-wet battle still goes on in all sections of the country.

The Temperance League of America, formerly the Anti-Saloon League, figures that some 23,000 local option elections have been held since repeal of the eighteenth amendment. In the November 2 election, citizens in 19 States voted on various liquor-control questions.

The drys have won a substantial majority of local-option elections in the past 15 years, but the Nation is still heavily wet. That is on a basis of population in areas where sale of distilled spirits and other beverages is permitted.

The Temperance League says latest available statistics indicate that the dries have been victorious in 13,600 of 22,286 elections on liquor control. The league estimates that about 25 million people reside in dry territory. (Latest census estimate of United States population, 146 million.)

The Distilled Spirits Institute reports that 81.1 per cent of the population lives in wet areas. This checks roughly with the league's estimate. (The institute is a public relations and research agency for the Distilled Spirits Industry.)

During the war the drys claimed steady gains in population percentages—from 17.5 per cent in 1941 to 19.1 per cent at the end of 1946. In 1947, the Distilled Spirits Institute reports, there was a net gain in wet population for the first time since 1940—and more wet gains were made in 1948.

Dried Up Locally

STATE-WIDE prohibition already was the law in 33 States when the eighteenth amendment went into effect in January, 1920. Local option and State prohibition had put 63 per cent of the population and 95 per cent of the land area of the United States under prohibition.

Two thirds of the members of the Senate and more than two thirds of the members of the House came from States or districts having State prohibition.

Today only three States—Oklahoma, Mississippi and Kansas—have State-wide prohibition of distilled spirits. Kansas voted in November to repeal its constitutional ban on liquor sales, but the State will be dry until the Legislature repeals a statute forbidding possession of spirits by any person.

Sixteen States and the District of Columbia are 100 per cent wet—contain no areas where the sale of distilled spirits is prohibited. In nine other States less than 5 per cent of the popupation resides in dry areas.

Local option gains of the drys have been largely in rural areas, small towns and the South. In six Southern States, more than 50 per cent of the population lives in dry territories—ranging from 51.7 per cent in Texas to 68.3 per cent in North Carolina.

The drys make a better showing on a county than on a population basis. Counties permitting sale of distilled spirits throughout the entire county number 1638. Counties totally dry for sale of distilled spirits number 959; partially dry counties, 473.

Tavern Berated

WHEN repeal was proclaimed December 5, 1933, President Roosevelt said:

"I ask especially that no State shall by law or otherwise, authorize the return of the saloon, either in its old form or in some modern guise."

Following repeal, many legislators in States adopting laws permitting liquor sales vowed "to prohibit forever the open saloon."

Miss Laura Lindley, research secretary of the Temperance League, says that "many people now feel that conditions in the tavern are no improvement over those in the saloon. In four States, five elections were held in 1948 which to all practical purposes meant a choice between the saloon and the modern tavern."

Howard T. Jones, executive secretary of the Distilled Spirits Institute, says "nobody in the industry will deny there are problems resulting from the sale of alcoholic beverages. However, prohibition proved that the solution was not in legal bans but rather in promoting temperance."

50-Cent Drunks

DEETS PICKETT, research secretary of the Methodist Board of Temperance, says the first temperance society in this country was started about 1808. Its rules were:

"No member shall drink rum, gin, whisky or any distilled spirit, except by advice of a physician or in case of actual disease or except at public dinners, under the penalty of 25 cents.

"No member shall become intoxicated under a penalty of 50 cents; and no member shall offer any of the above liquors to any person to drink thereof under the penalty of 25 cents for each offense."

State-wide prohibition was first adopted in 1846 by Maine. The second prohibition State was Kansas (1880), and the third North Dakota (1889).

The Anti-Saloon League was formed in Ohio in 1893. The Women's Christian Temperance Union was founded in the early 1870's.

New Ties With Europe?

Historic Debate Due On U. S. Military Aid

By Sigrid Arne
Associated Press Staff Writer

EARLY in the new Congress, members will be asked to decide whether this Nation should go to war for a friend the instant that friend is attacked.

Debate promises to be historic. Never before has this Nation been willing to say to another nation, "Your safety is mine."

But now, faced with the march of communism through Middle Europe and the Far East, top American leaders in both political parties, in the State Department and in the National Defense Agency have decided to ask Congress to pledge aid to five European nations.

The five are Britain, France, The Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg—the so-called "Western Union" nations. Those nations have already pledged a "one-for-all" military protection of each other.

The Europeans want Americans and Canadians to say, "When any of us is attacked in the future, all of us will gang up immediately." Months ago, both Washington and Ottawa began to explore the idea. American and Canadian military men are sitting in on planning sessions of the five European nations.

Both State Department and military men have told this reporter that nothing is clear in Washington at this point except that they believe such a pledge would be good for this reason: We could make war so hard to wage as to either delay a potential enemy for a long time or stop another World War in its tracks.

Training Coordinated

SOME MONTHS ago, State Department advisers told the Western Union nations to do two things: (1) Work out what they could do among themselves to put up a strong defense, and (2) Figure out what help they would need from us and Canada.

The five nations' military leaders have (1) decided to give uniform training to their troops, air and navy men; (2) named a single commander, British Field Marshal Bernard L. Montgomery; (3) begun to plan a joint defense policy; (4) listed the supplies they can make themselves and what they would need from us.

That shopping list will be presented to the new Congress.

Washington experts are uncertain of the exact shape any new American move should take on the law books. Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), the Republican leader on foreign policy, has said the pledge should be made in a treaty, which the Senate would have to ratify.

State Department men think there should also be an "enabling law" giving the Government the "go-ahead" and an appropriation bill voting money to cover the cost of supplies to the five western European armies.

A Supply Gamble

THERE ARE many stumbling blocks on the road. Here are some:

1. The top American military man on the negotiations says some Europeans still think we could land an Air Force in Europe the day any of them is attacked. He points out that would take previous permission to use their airports, great gasoline and parts dumps and trained repair crews. He says he will oppose putting American supply dumps on the Continent until he thinks Europeans are able and willing to fight long enough to keep the supplies out of enemy hands.

2. American experts now think that any armaments plant in the five nations should be left to turn out materials for the alliance's armies, and not be converted. The Americans want Europeans to turn out all the military supplies they can for themselves—as, for example, the British turning out planes, the Belgians small arms and several of them electrical equipment.

American Army men expect trouble putting the best designs into production. They fear national pride may stop one nation from using the top designs of others, such as the American jet plane.

3. The top United States military negotiator spoke a further warning: Washington's top planners will have to convince the American people that it is better to get ready ahead of time to fight beside friends than to wait for the bombs to fall on all separately. He says all the European governments will have to sell the same lesson to their own people.

Scientific Center Is War Memorial

HONOLULU, Nov. 20 (AP).—A scientific research center on the remote island of Koror is to become the first of a series of working memorials to America's Pacific war dead.

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Hill, newlyweds from Laguna Beach, Calif., and the University of Michigan, have gone to Koror, in the Palaus, 30 miles from Peleliu, to establish the center and spend a year collecting data.

The Pacific War Memorial, Inc., is the idea of Archibald Roosevelt and is headed by Lieut. Gen. Robert C. Richardson, jr., wartime Army commander in Hawaii. Its headquarters are in New York.

The New East Will Be Able To Talk Big

their interests is to be represented by men whom they choose themselves.

The politics of tomorrow in China, therefore, will be an elaborate fabric of compromise—on the one hand between the tightly organized Communists and the loosely organized but armed peasants, and on the other hand between the centralized Communist party machine and clusters of regional power scattered widely over China.

China's New Stature

IT HAS been suggested that we step back into the China situation as mediators and negotiators and try to bring about a compromise, coalition government that will not be as near-Communist as the Communists would like it to be.

That idea will no longer work. It was good in its time, but the breath of life passed out of it when the Marshall Mission folded up in January, 1947. That failure was not Marshall's fault, but it was a failure just the same. No compromise will work in China now unless it is set up considerably to the left of what might have been the stabilization point two years ago.

For the first time in more than a hundred years the structure of the government of China is beyond the reach of manipulation by the great powers. America and Russia are going to find that what counts in China is the kind of government evolved by the play of Chinese political, economic, social and military forces.

There is today virtually no limit to the ability of the Chinese to maneuver and take advantage of rivalry between us and Russia.

The future in China and Asia is not going to be an "American Century." Neither is it going to be a "Russian Century." It is going to be, in its main outlines, an Asian Century.

Democracy's Chance

THE MAIN force in bringing this about will be neither socialism nor capitalism, but nationalism. If we are quick in accepting nationalism as the only foundation on which anything permanent can be built, then we shall see a great many features of capitalism, private enterprise and political democracy incorporated in the superstructure. If the Russians are quicker than we are in accepting Asia on its own terms, there will be more socialism in the superstructure.

We have one advantage. China, India and colonial Asia need machinery, capital and technology. Russia cannot supply these in large quantities. We can. China, however, and later on the other countries of Asia, will not be willing to grant us even partial political control as a guarantee for the security of our investments.

"Risk capital," the Chinese will say, "is entitled to the profits of risk capital. It is not entitled to the rewards of risk capital plus political guarantees which eliminate risk. Trade with us and take your profits, or—don't trade."

The Chinese are going to be able to talk as big as this and make it stick. We should not get lost in futile argument about the Marxism of the Chinese Communists versus "agrarian radicalism." The Chinese Communists are entitled to sober respect on one count. They have demonstrated that they can keep up, for years on end, a tolerable and even somewhat improved standard of living in territory they control. That means that we cannot starve them out or browbeat them with economic threats.

Industry Daren't Neglect Human Relations

'Get Your Employes on the Team'

By Harry A. Bullis

The following is from an address delivered by Mr. Bullis, chairman of the board of directors of General Mills, Inc., before the Congress of American Industry at New York.

HUMAN RELATIONS problems are clearly the most important issues, and certainly the most vexing, before the world today. We all know that the last hundred years has seen more scientific and material progress than the past millennium—but ethical and spiritual progress has been sadly lacking. The two most destructive wars in history have occurred in the twentieth century, not yet half gone, and we are not certain about preventing a third and possibly more horrible conflict.

First of all, let me emphasize that we should think of a human individual, not as being composed of one part which carries on physical activity and another different one which does the thinking. We must think of the individual as a unit, which both thinks and acts. And we must plan our program of human relations accordingly.

Another way of expressing this principle is to say that employees should not be treated merely as pickets in a fence, or as cogs in a machine. They must be accepted as associates who have self-respect and self-confidence. Each should be given an opportunity to advance if he or she is willing to pay the price in intelligent hard work.

While people differ a great deal, there are some points of similarity and certain human characteristics that we can count on. You can be quite sure that every man on the payroll has certain personal aspirations:

1. He wants to get ahead.
2. He wants the assurance of security for himself and his family.
3. He wants recognition as an individual, and of the part he plays in the whole organization.

A Waiting Ladder

LET us consider first the desire to get ahead. The most obvious form that this takes is the desire for good wages or for a reasonable salary. In some cases, too, there is a desire for advancement, but this is by no means universal.

In breaking down the barricades between management and the workers, the fact must be admitted that we cannot all be leaders. In fact, we do not all want to be leaders. In the Army, though everyone knows there are distinct advantages in being an officer, many men prefer life as a private. It is the same in industry.

Years ago, Henry Ford found that of wage earners who want more money, scarcely more than 5 per cent will accept the additional responsibility and the heavier load that go with advancement.

Whatever the figure is today, it is vital that we open the door of opportunity for those who would climb to higher levels. Furthermore, we must constantly keep this "open door policy" before our employes. I believe this is the greatest weapon that business has today for the "isms" attacking America.

Give opportunity to the man who wants opportunity, and he will make the most of it. And he will be a great booster for the American way. But make the mistake of keeping that light of opportunity under a basket, and you have trouble makers who demand a change in the economic order.

Opportunity must also mean improvement for the group. We must impress those who do not want to be leaders, who are content to continue in the ranks, that they, too, have a future in business; that business through successful operation will improve their lot. In other words, their opportunity is in direct ratio to the success of the business that employs them. And what helps business will in turn help them.

Ready Alternative

ANOTHER common desire is security for one's self and one's family. Here again employes must be shown that their security is related to the security of the company. But all the while management must remember that where business fails to provide reasonable security, employes will look to Government for that security.

Government-provided security invites bureaucracy, strangling taxation, and loss of liberties.

HARRY A. BULLIS
. . . "associates, not cogs"

There are limits beyond which business cannot go in providing security, but in general it can do more than it has been doing. This problem in human relations should challenge the best that is in us.

Assuming your employe has sufficient income and a reasonable degree of security—is he content? No, he wants more than these. He craves satisfaction in his work. He wants the respect of his fellows, and to feel that he belongs—that he is a member of the team.

These wants are much less definite than wages and hours of work, pensions and insurance. But they are equally important. To ignore them is to invite discontent and inefficiency. This underlying sense of frustration and restlessness is basic, and granting demands for shorter hours and higher wages will not eliminate it.

Consider the desire for recognition, for participation—how important it is in the science of human engineering! Yet how often, instead of saying, "Men, we are all on the team, and we will win together," management seems to say, "Men, I AM THE TEAM!" Yet, it only seems to say it. It may think altogether otherwise. But good thoughts, unlike good deeds, do not speak for themselves, and the employe gets the wrong impression.

The Unknowing Cog

A GOOD SHARE of our personnel problems today result from the very nature of our mass production system. Under the old handicraft system, a man made an article from beginning to end. He could look at the finished product—the graceful silver teapot, the well-turned boot, the sturdy wagon—and know that his own strength and skill had made it what it was. He took pride in his work. He derived satisfaction from doing a good job.

Today much industrial work is monotonous, uninteresting. Piece workers often do not know the use of the part they make. Is it any wonder they become bored? The worker in a monotonous, repetitive operation must have some compensation for pride in workmanship. He wants recognition of some sort if he is to get any real satisfaction out of his job. It is up to management to devise ways of giving it to him.

Many ways can be found to increase the employees' feeling of participation, to lower the barrier between management and the rank and file. Some executives never talk to an employe across their desks, considering that the business office has an unhealthy atmosphere of authority. They get out with the men.

In an industrial plant the most direct way to cultivate this sense of participation is through the foremen on the line. It is the foreman who has the day-to-day and hour-to-hour contact with the men. To the worker, the foreman is management. That is why the Ford Motor Co., for instance, has elevated the status of foremen to where they are actually closer to management, and thus helped bridge the gap between management and worker.

Management must give more attention to the selection of foremen and supervisors. It is true that an employe gets his first and often his most lasting impressions of a company through his supervisor during his first few days on the job. Supervisors can make or break a program of human relations.

A good supervisor understands the motivating forces behind human behavior. He will know that Joe is worried over a sick child, or over a wife who is spending too much on clothes. He can handle Joe accordingly on the job, sympathetically and skillfully.

We prevent breakdowns of machines and motors because we know the danger signals. A doctor can predict heart conditions and other ailments from symptoms. By the same token, an alert supervisor can see when an interruption or bad attitude is developing in his working force. If he senses the trouble, he can prevent a major upheaval, or the loss of good employes, or an increase in costs.

A Story to Tell

PARTICIPATION — how can employes participate in a business? Management has to communicate this sense of participation. It may have to vault over the barricade of a hostile union. But with truth on its side, and good foremen interpreting the facts, the management story can be carried over.

This story can concern any number of factors. It can show the employe how his production is directly tied to company earnings, and how these earnings are in direct ratio to wages and employe security. It can, in short, make the employe feel he is on the team.

It is important that we give employes the complete company financial picture in terms they can understand. Earnings should be included—but not only earnings. Let industry show the totals of its payrolls, the number of its employes, and the amount of earnings reinvested in the business to create more jobs and services. Let company executives list employes for what they are, the most important asset of the company.

Let's correct erroneous notions of high earnings by showing their true relation to the sales dollar and to investors' funds. But let us show how earnings are used. And let us repeat again and again how employes have profited along with the company.

Constant repetition of the facts will neutralize malicious propaganda.

Management must apply itself with all the vigor it can command to the task of satisfying the complete wants of its personnel. These wants are psychological as well as material. They range over the whole gamut of human emotions, and they are changing constantly. Management must be quick to adapt its methods and its thinking to the changing wants of employes in this high-powered, highly industrialized civilization of ours.

Haifa Gives Displaced Children a Welcome

By Fred M. Hechinger

RAANANA, Israel (delayed).—Thousands of children are arriving in Haifa harbor. They have been saved from the suffering and the camps of Europe; but they need more than a new country. They need the substitute for a home; for their parents and families are dead.

The "Children's Village and Farm School" in Raanana, about a half hour's drive from Tel Aviv, is one of many centers where orphaned refugee children are finding rehabilitation, training, education and a new outlook on the life to come.

The "Village" is one of many, but aside from the fact that it combines worldly and religious education it is typical of the great majority.

This center is only a little over a year old. Its location had been uncultivated wasteland. Today it is a flower and vegetable garden, and there has even been a first crop of bananas. The small, pavilion-type houses and the larger, graceful community buildings are spotless white adorned with a few edges of red brick.

Adults in Background

THE visitor feels that he is driving into an unknown chapter of a fairy tale: the businesslike farmers in the fields are sturdy youngsters; the drivers of a full-grown team of well-tended horses are two boys in their early teens; "KP" is being done cheerfully and with hustling efficiency by a group of girls who might elsewhere be playing childishly in a doll's kitchen; and even the "nurses"—male and female—in charge of happy groups of healthy, laughing kids—are little more than kids themselves.

The few adults—there are seven trained teachers and 35 expert child social workers for about 250 children—remain tactfully in the background. But their trained skill is available day and night. It is characteristic that Chaim Zevy Enoch, the acting director at Raanana, is the head of the Jerusalem Teachers' College.

School is held in small pavilions, and each "class" constitutes a homelike unit of living, studying and working together. Each group has its own small clubroom, kitchenette and dining room and "school"—built around the dormitory-wing with miniature rooms for four children each. There are model bath and shower rooms which look like something out of an up-to-date version of the Seven Dwarfs.

The youngsters eat breakfast and lunch in their own dining rooms, but the main meal is served for and by them in the combination theater-community-mess hall with its adjoining kitchen, food store and refrigeration rooms. "We could have them take all their meals in small groups," explained Ester Fraenkel, one of the young teachers; "but this way we give them experience in the two important ways of living: the small family and the large community."

Informal Grouping

IN one of the community classrooms a lesson was in progress. Children were informally grouped around the teacher. They addressed him by his first name, and it was immediately evident that he acted as a friend rather than as a superior. At the same time, the cheerful informality never transgressed the bounds of voluntary discipline.

We were "introduced" to a little 7-year-old boy. He had arrived only a few days ago from central Europe; but he was already part of the community, although few of the children understood his language. His birthplace had been "enemy country"; his nursery the DP camp. "Now," said Director Enoch, a native Palestinian, "he has come home."

The children at Raanana range from 6 to 17. They get all their elementary and secondary schooling as well as vocational training here. From the age of 13 they take care of the serious work, such as cooking, sewing, farming and tending the animals. A young, 14-year-old guide showed us "his" chicken farm with the expert matter-of-factness of the seasoned farmer. Raanana sells eggs commercially and profitably in the open market.

In well-equipped, well-lighted workshops youngsters learn to turn out precision instruments and tools and to weave anything from their own supply of napkins and dishrags to curtains and rugs. An expert teacher instructs every member of a class of about 25 individually.

"We regard the work here not as pure vocational training," said Miss Fraenkel. "All of it—the housekeeping, the farming, the workshops—is part of an effort to give these youngsters reliance in their individual talents. They have been brought up in camps where they depended on handouts and charity. They have learned the wrong kind of community living—the community of degraded animals. Our job is to make of them self-sufficient individuals first before we can lead them safely back into the cooperative community."

Help Where Needed

ESTER FRAENKEL, not too far beyond her teens herself, is not theoretical or academic in her approach. In 1946 she volunteered to leave her beginner's job at Jerusalem Teachers' College for a year's volunteer work in displaced children's camps in the United States zone of Germany. She was one of hundreds of Israeli educators who sacrificed time and comfort to help where help was needed.

In the functional but cheerful office of the director the mail had just arrived. It had come from a dozen-odd European countries, east and west. But by this time the youngsters have all become one group in the melting pot of a new country.

The most modern educational methods are used. There are no rigid classes through which each child must progress in a certain period of time. Each youngster is advanced as quickly as native talent and previous schooling permit. A few of the most capable are sent on to higher education in the cities.

Certain subjects are offered to all "houses" and ages at the same hour. Mathematics, for instance, was being given in all classrooms from 8 to 9 in the morning. Consequently it becomes easy to send a youngster into the next higher form without waiting for the end of the term.

How effective the method of individual attention can be was demonstrated recently in a dramatic case. A 7-year-old Hungarian orphan seemed to be mute by birth. Teachers gave her special attention, made her feel secure and helped her to become integrated in the children's community. After two months—unexpectedly and to everybody's delighted surprise—she spoke her first words. They were: "I want to go to school."

Costs $50 a Month

IT takes about 50 dollars a month to pay for the total expense of one child. Most of the financial backing comes from the Mizrachi Women's Organization of America. But when a pretty, blond-braided youngster of 8 came into the office with a happy smile, we knew that the money was well spent. Last year we had seen the same youngster in the hopelessness of a DP camp.

Not all of life at Raanana is work by any means. Like children in the best boarding schools anywhere these youngsters have their games and their fun. They provide much of their own entertainment and, with the help of their teachers, they have their own theater. And like every well-ordered community this one has not only a temple and a library, but a swimming pool and sport grounds.

The children along the path were playing like children everywhere except that even the youngest among them took care not to step into the neat beds of flowers. There were no fences, but Miss Fraenkel explained: "No need for it. They planted the flowers themselves."

Life in Israel is the hard life of the pioneer country. At Raanana, too, reveille is at 5:30 (with calisthenics!) and taps comes at 8:30 in the evening. But even there, harshness has been tempered with culture—the morning alarm consists of classical music. Aida's Triumphal March, we learned, is the popular favorite to wake up to.

Teacher Pay Called $250 Under Normal

By The Associated Press

THE National Education Association said yesterday the average teacher gets $250 a year less than the average for all employed persons. This low pay is causing a crisis in elementary schools, it said.

Willard E. Givens, executive secretary of the association, said the 1948-49 national average for all teachers in public elementary and secondary schools is $2750, compared with $2500 a year ago.

However, Givens said two deflating factors actually make today's pay equal to only $1458 in prewar dollars:

First, the increase in the cost of living. Second, the fact teachers now must pay Federal income taxes from which they were exempt prior to 1939.

The situation is particularly bad, Givens' statement said, in elementary schools because elementary teachers receive about $500 less a year than those who teach in secondary schools.

"For all practical purposes, the take-home pay of the average teacher in 1948-49 will be worth slightly more in purchasing power than the average salary in 1939-40, but in the labor market, as compared with other occupations, the economic status of the average teacher today is substantially below that of the prewar teacher," Givens said a survey revealed.

Radcliffe Offers 50 Fellowships

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 4.—Approximately 50 fellowships varying in amounts from $500 to $1500 will be offered for the academic year 1949-50 by the Radcliffe Graduate School.

Advanced study is open to women for the degrees of master of arts, master of arts in teaching and doctor of philosophy. Instruction by members of the Harvard faculty is offered in 37 fields of study.

Completed applications should reach Radcliffe College not later than March 1, 1949.

College Gets $100,000

Pittsburgh, Dec. 4.—A gift of $100,000 in securities from an anonymous donor was announced this week by Dr. Paul R. Anderson, president of Pennsylvania College for Women.

The gift is the first contribution toward a proposed building housing administrative offices, classrooms and a theater.

$512,706 Student Loans

Urbana-Champaign, Ill., Dec. 4.—Student loan funds at the University of Illinois now exceed a half million dollars.

The total is $512,706.25, built up through gifts and income in the 49 years since the funds were established in 1899.

Loans made during the year numbered 3015 in the sum of $113,731.50. They were principally short-term loans to veterans; only 63 long-term loans were made. The loan funds are available to students at each of the university's campus centers—Urbana-Champaign, Chicago and Galesburg.

Schools Give Children Courses In Planning Cities of Future

EDUCATION for youngsters in city planning as a means of insuring better cities and better citizens is being offered in many communities, the American Society of Planning Officials reported last week.

The Greater Boston Development Committee recently published "Surging Cities," a profusely illustrated book aimed at making the study of civics of direct practical application to the child's home town and immediate neighborhood. Designed to stimulate the imagination of ninth and tenth graders, the text traces the development of cities from the prehistoric Swiss lake villages to the present-day metropolis. The last half of the book applies this background material to the current situation in the Boston area.

The Tennessee State Planning Commission is distributing a pamphlet which stresses the importance of such education in the public schools. The commission recommends that planning be utilized as a tool in teaching many courses.

Atlanta's board of education, realizing that the school children of today will be responsible for the future growth of cities, prepared and is using in the schools a textbook, "Building Atlanta's Future," which depicts ways of making the city a better place to live in.

In Richmond the planning education program includes an exhibit a manual on the master plan to be used as a text and the showing of films on city planning. The Buffalo planning board prepared and distributed a book on planning for use in the schools.

San Francisco's planning commission prepared a syllabus as a guide for public school teachers when a planning course was inaugurated there. More recently the school district prepared a text, "San Francisco Today," for use in elementary school classes.

Draft of Teachers Proposed in India

Conscription of educated persons to serve as teachers was suggested in a resolution brought before a recent meeting of the Bombay Assembly by Srimati Lilavati Munshi, the Government of India Information Services reported last week.

The resolution recommended the appointment of a committee to work out details of a scheme to conscript matriculates and graduates for service as teachers in primary and secondary schools.

The resolution followed a statement earlier this year by the Education Minister, Maulana Abul Kalam Azad, who told the All-India Educational Conference in New Delhi that "I would urge upon every educated man and woman to regard it as a sacred national service to come forward and serve as a teacher for at least two years."

For basic education alone for children between the ages of 6 and 14, nearly 900,000 teachers are needed in India.

Numbers Only, Please

Even a Figure Wiz Can't Recall Everything

By Carroll Arimond

CHICAGO, Dec. 4 (AP).—"What a memory! Bet he never misses on his wedding anniversary."

That's the usual first reaction on seeing Olgo, the mathematical mental wizard, sort through his bag of tricks. But Olgo is quick to debunk his own talents.

"Send me for a dozen eggs and a loaf of bread sometimes," he says. "I may come back with an egg and a dozen loaves of bread."

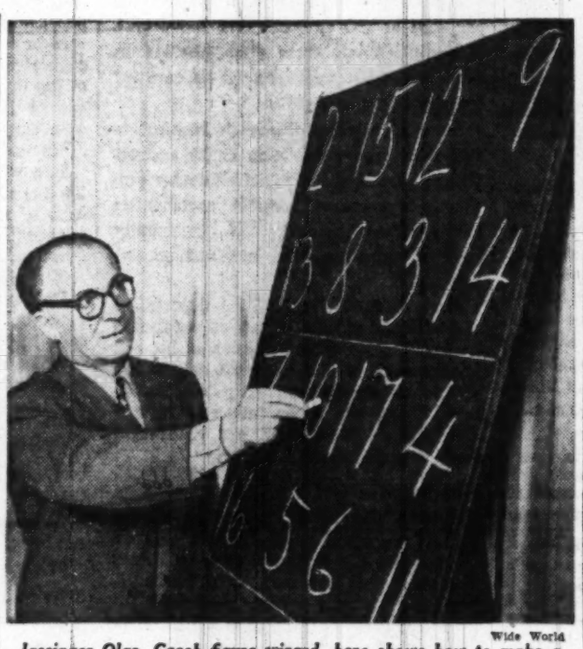
They're His Forte

NUMBERS are his forte. Jassinger Olgo has been living off them and his phenomenal faculty for remembering them for a quarter century. A Czechoslovakian who calls London home, Olgo now is on an American tour.

He calls for telephone numbers—no exchange names, please—from his audience. Then he performs various other feats of memory and before bowing off recites a dozen or so of the telephone numbers in the order they were called to him.

How does he do it?

"It's a gift I was born with," he says. "Maybe science will be able to figure it out when I am gone. I've sold my head to the University of Vienna.



Wide World

Jassinger Olgo, Czech figure wizard, here shows how to make a square of numbers so that they will add up to 38 in diagonal, horizontal and vertical rows

Olgo, now a slight, bald man of 45, was one of six children of a Novemesto, Slovakia, farmer. When he was 5½ years old, he watched his father groping with a mathematical problem. Olgo, who had had no schooling, asked his father what he was doing with pencil and paper. His father tried to brush him off.

"Why do you work so hard at it, Papa?" The boy asked. "The number you are trying to find is 1092."

The father smiled and calculated some more. The number was 1092. He took the boy in hand and went into the house. "Mama," he said, "we have a crazy son. I am taking him to Vienna to a doctor."

In Vienna the elder Olga found he had no demented child, but a prodigy. Except for four hours in his teens, Olgo has been an entertainer ever since.

"They gave me a job in a bank at three times what older men were earning," he recalls. "I went to work at 8 o'clock. I left at noon for lunch and never went back."

Olgo calls for any date over hundreds of years. In a second after it is called out, he snaps out "Friday" or whatever day of the week it might be.

He does that by a mathematical formula with the aid of his memory. He has memorized the day of the week on which January 1 fell over hundreds of years. Given the year, his mind immediately flashes through the formula and comes up with the day of the week.

A chance acquaintance once asked him how long he could remember a set of figures.

"I may not see you again for 20 years," Olgo told him, "but when I do I'll tell you your telephone number as you just gave it to me."

With that promise Olgo left. Five minutes later he was back, knocking at the door. "I forgot my hat," Olgo said.

College Funds for Everybody Pose Problem in Ohio Town

By Richard Wesp

LITHOPOLIS, Ohio, Dec. 4.—(AP).—The affection of an heiress for her father's birthplace has most teen-agers in this one street central Ohio village engrossed in a welter of college catalogues.

Every boy and girl living in Lithopolis—population 288—can have a $450-a-year grant to attend college, just for the asking.

Youngsters from the surrounding farms and hamlets in the 6 square miles of Bloom Township also are entitled to the money.

Mrs. Mabel Wagnalls Jones, daughter of millionaire dictionary publisher Adam Wagnalls, willed the village and township the major portion of her fortune—$2,500,000—and the only string is that the money be used to buy college educations.

Mrs. Jones died in 1946, but long before then the community which Adam Wagnalls left as an infant had experienced the lavish generosity of its favorite son's daughter.

In 1925 Mrs. Jones built a $500,000 community center in Lithopolis and dedicated it to her parents. The ivy-covered, Tudor-Gothic building is the village's largest structure and houses a public library of more than 9000 volumes.

Even the village's only cemetery, crowned by the glistening white sarcophagi of Adam Wagnalls, his wife and family, is partly supported by the Jones estate.

Now Available

THE college grants were available for the first time this year. Five of Bloom Township's 1948 high school graduating class have received their first checks. Administrators of the $2,500,000 are the five members of the governing board of the community center.

Mrs. Mabel Stevenson, soft-spoken secretary to the board, said the only qualifications a youngster must have to receive a scholarship are entrance to an accredited college and residence in Bloom Township.

"They must take a regular college course," she explained. "We don't want them studying, for example, in business colleges."

A student whose course takes longer than four years, Mrs. Stevenson, said, will continue to receive his yearly $450 until he completes his work.

Bloom Township's only school ends at the eighth grade. Older students attend one of three large high schools in nearby towns.

About half of the 20 youngsters who will be eligible for the scholarships next year said they intend to apply for them. Some will study agriculture, some law and others medicine.

Girls who want to be secretaries—but can't receive the grants for studying at business college—said they would take college courses in business administration.

Most of the youngsters who will use the scholarships said they intended going to college, anyway—but added that the $450 means they won't have to work during summer vacations.

Several others said they had had enough of the three Rs and would pass up the grants.

Dan Nusbaum, an 18-year-old farm boy, explained simply, "I don't like school that well."

Better Digger

WHEN the older folks gather down at Rollie Kistler's hardware store, though, the scholarships are discussed with enthusiasm.

"Having all of that money is going to bring people to Bloom Township," Kistler remarks, and white heads nod in agreement.

"A man would be silly not to bring his kids where they can get free college educations," another oldster chimes in. "It'll make a man a better ditch digger to be educated, even if it doesn't do anything else."

William Cox, principal of the Bloom Township School, adds ruefully:

"If I had had a chance like that I wouldn't still be working for my masters degree."

Another view of the scholarships came from a tobacco-chewing pensioner.

"I ain't disapprovin," he observed, "but it seems to me, with most of the kids going off to college, in 20 years we'll all need dictionaries, just to talk to each other."

Fund for Dickinson Reaches $207,000

Carlisle, Pa., Dec. 4.—Subscriptions to the first phase of the 10-year development program launched by Dickinson College at its 175th anniversary celebration last spring have reached $207,000. This amount represents 28 per cent of the $750,000 fund which the college seeks to raise in 30 months for endowments and for a new dormitory for women students.

The largest gift of $50,000, made by Boyd Lee Spahr, president of the board of trustees, will be used to endow a professorship to be known as the Boyd Lee Spahr Professorship.

New Sex Education Movie Wins Support of District Parents

A SUCCESSFUL experiment tried by the State of Oregon may encourage the District Board of Education to relax its ban on "sex education" in the local schools.

The experiment is a 19-minute sound and color film, "Human Growth."

Financed by the University of Oregon's E. C. Brown Trust Fund, the movie was in preparation for 10 years before it was filmed by Hollywood's Eddie Albert. Since its release in the spring, it has been shown successfully to more than 2000 Oregon school children.

Currently a copy is being shown by the Washington Social Hygiene Society to parent-teacher associations and other adult groups.

The film was designed for children in the sixth through ninth grades, but because the Board of Education has not yet approved, it cannot be shown to District youngsters.

Parents Favor It

DURING the past two months the Social Hygiene Society has run off the film before more than 50 organizations to an audience estimated at 8000.

Opinion of parents registered on cards after the showings has been nearly unanimous that the movie be used in classrooms. One mother of six asked to borrow the film for a private showing in her home so that her children could see it.

In an informal discussion following presentation recently before the Buchanan Elementary School P-TA, a mother declared it "ridiculous" that her children should learn in school about the reproduction of pigs but not about people.

"My children pick up sex information at school, anyway," said another parent. "Why can't they be taught it right?"

In this discussion group, in which more than 30 participated, the mothers emphasized their view that the schools should accept responsibility in teaching the "facts of life."

Whether the schools have that responsibility, and if so how much, has been a subject of heated controversy among school officials here for a good many years. The Board of Education has leaned to the view that it is the duty of parents and of family doctors to give sex instruction to children. Paid school officials have been inclined to work it into the curriculum.

Vetoed 5 Years Ago

THESE SCHOOL officials have indicated they will not bring the film before the board but are hoping that parents' demand will result in the board's reviewing it.

One explained that since the school board five years ago severely trimmed a "sex education" program out of the curriculum, school officials have been loath to make recommendations on the subject.

The film considerably lessens the problem of the teacher by presenting sex in a matter-of-fact way, without embarrassment, as a part of "human growth."

It opens in a home, with a brother and sister telling their parents that in school the next day they are going to see a film about growth.

The scene then shifts to the classroom and to a teacher-led discussion on what children should look for in the film.

The classroom is darkened and a film within a film is flashed on a screen. In animated diagrams it discusses growth, shows the male and female sex organs, explains changes that take place during adolescence and in the conception and birth of a baby.

The film shifts back to the classroom with the teacher calling for questions. She answers them one by one, using slides.

Then she turns and speaks to the audience viewing the film and urges the students to ask their own teacher questions.

Slides Are Available

PARENTS who saw the film at Buchanan School praised this easy transition from the movie classroom to the regular classroom.

Slides used by the teacher in the film come with the movie for use by the regular classroom teacher in answering questions.

Proponents of sex education in the local school system would like to see "Human Growth" used because it can be slipped into the regular program without the emphasis that it is sex education.

"No responsible modern educator would propose, promote, or support an isolated course labeled 'sex education'," said Ray Everett, director of the Social Hygiene Society. "Just as sex is an integral part of the wholeness of life, so sex education should be an integral part of the whole educational process.

"In fact, since the expression 'sex education' seems to have become a fighting term, it would be fine if we could drop it from our vocabularies. Then, perhaps due attention to its component parts would be given in the courses that are their logical basis—human reproduction in biology, the social aspects in sociology, family and household economics in home economics, the pubertal changes and the few needed facts about venereal disease in health and physical education."

High School Elective

A STUDY of the curriculum shows that while sex is not avoided in the courses mentioned by Everett, little attention is given to it.

What children learn is dependent more on their own inquisitiveness and the daring of their teachers than on the curriculum.

There is no program in the elementary or junior high schools. The reproductive system is touched on in high school biology but the course is not required for all students.

The home economics department offers a course in child study for high school girls, but it, too, is an elective. Approximately 20 per cent of girl students take the course. It is divided into three units—the family, prenatal and postnatal care and the care and training of young children.

Every high school student is required to take a three-year course in health instruction as part of the physical education program. The course includes sections on family life, personal and community hygiene, nutrition, first aid and mental hygiene.

Birch E. Bayh, head of the department of health and physical education, said there is considerable frank discussion of boy-girl relationships in these classes, which are held separately for boys and girls. The emphasis, Bayh said, is on "clean living and high ideals. Facts about sex are taught more by indirection."

1943 Critic OK's Film

IT WAS this health instruction course that was cut considerably by the Board of Education five years ago after Dr. James A Gannon, physician member of the board, called the previous course "shocking."

The banned course included a three-week study of male and female sex organs and their functions, and an outline of the process of reproduction.

Dr. Gannon, who has seen the film, "Human Growth," has described it as "good biology" and said he has no objection to its use in the schools.

"I rather prefer, though, the present method of showing it to parents," Dr. Gannon said.

A broadened sex education program is advocated by Capt. Rhoda J. Milliken, head of the Police Department Women's Bureau, and by Dr. Ross S. Taggart, venereal disease director for the Health Department.

"In many homes," Captain Milliken said, "there is no one to answer a child's questions about sex. Every child has a right to look to someone for decent information. Frequently the only way children get their questions answered is by other children or undesirable adults."

Dr. Taggart said that he sees a need for educating children about sex at an early age. In tracing back cases of venereal disease, he has found many children with sex histories beginning at the age of 12.

The Weakest Argument

WHILE Everett feels that a good program of sex education will cut down the rate of illegitimacy, venereal disease and prostitution, he says these factors should not be stressed in any educational program.

"They will be the by-products of a program that emphasizes good family living."

"Probably the weakest argument used against extending sound education on sex is that it will lead to undesirable experimentation," Everett said. "This is as absurd as an argument that sound moral teaching leads to immorality.

"There is no pornographic kick about a scientific vocabulary."

Tough Sledding For Weatherman With a Family

By John London
Post Reporter

WHEN Ernest C. Johnson leaves home for work, his wife Jessie always asks: "Darling, should I wear the heavy coat or the light one today?" His daughter, Jean, 6, eager owner of a new sled, asks: "Daddy, whenyagonna put the snow in?"

And when Johnson visits his kinfolk at Tye River, Va., the farmer up the road wants to know if it's a good day to cut his hay.

In fact, just about everywhere Ernest C. Johnson, 40, goes, questions about the weather are sure to follow—his work never ends, even when he's not working.

Fortunately, the barrel-chested former college athlete likes his job as Weather Bureau prophet at National Airport. "It's a game," he finds. "You win and lose just often enough to want to come back and win more—or at least try."

Invasion Forecaster

JOHNSON, who used to play football and basketball for VMI, wins with the weather about 85 per cent of the time—officially, as supervisor of aviation forecasting, and privately, as weather counsel to family and friends.

Most of all, he likes predicting snow and ice. "My favorite hobby," he explains, "is ice skating."

Next best, he enjoys figuring what days will be driest in the dry months of October, November and May. Those are the days he vacations.

His toughest weather anticipating was during the war, forecasting for the invasions of southern and northern France—after he had been cleared by the FBI.

"They checked up on me clean back to my birth," he says. "And they like to scared my brother-in-law to death back in Tye River, when they questioned him about me. He thought they were fixing to lock me up."

Johnson drifted into his life's work riding tail winds of depression and happenstance.

"I had a B. S. degree in chemistry from VMI, was taking premed courses at George Washington," he recalls. "Then the storm came, the depression of '29."

He had to quit school. Casting about for a job, he took civil service exams. Next thing he knew he was a junior weather observer.

Advice From Clients

FIRST assigned to the Richmond station, he studied law on the side and passed the Virginia bar; then he was assigned to Greensboro, N. C., and, since 1940, here. Johnson, who lives at 1461 N. Lancaster st., Arlington, has just learned he'll be promoted in January and placed in charge of the Albany, N. Y., Weather Bureau station.

While here he's built up a steady clientele of telephone callers, not all of whom phone for advice about the weather.

"My favorite problem," he confides, "is a somewhat psychopathic woman who calls almost daily with her own advice, if not orders."

The other day she phoned to inform Johnson he could clear the Washington atmosphere "merely by going to New York, taking the Statue of Liberty and turning it upside down in the ocean."

"Another time she phoned and complained that the stars were disappearing. She ordered me to 'turn the clouds off.'

"Ah, if I only had the power . . ." sighs Johnson.

In a slotted steel "bubble" atop the Weather Bureau offices at National Airport, Ernest C. Johnson follows a weather balloon with a theodolite

U. S. Employe Union a Poser for CIO

By Adrienne Tassler
Post Reporter

A TWO-PRONGED offensive against the left-wing United Public Workers of America, subject of a verbal lashing last week by CIO President Philip Murray, may be launched here shortly.

Major threat to the militant union's sovereignty is expected to develop at a meeting next month of the 51-member CIO executive board. On a local level, the UPWA may find itself challenged at about the same time by at least a handful of heretofore quiescent right-wing Washington unions.

A movement is now under way to have some half dozen right-wing groups join the Industrial Union Council—a CIO central body here which is now virtually run by UPWA locals. Aim of the drive is to wrest control of the IUC from these left-wing unions.

At present, some observers feel the IUC is simply serving as a political mouthpiece for the UPWA.

A Way Around

THERE is every indication that when the CIO executive board convenes in Washington, it will meet head on the problem of declining CIO strength in the Government field—attributed by many to leftist union leadership. UPWA President Abram Flaxer is a member of the board.

National CIO officials say it's an entirely new and difficult problem which the executive board is scheduled to tackle here January 26—and declined to predict just how it would be handled.

Since affiliated unions are autonomous, their charters cannot be lifted "outright," a spokesman said. However, the board could issue a charter to a new union, awarding it the UPWA's jurisdiction, or it could establish a CIO organizing committee to take over UPWA's job.

Standing by Guns

LAST month's CIO convention gave the executive board authority to "investigate and take necessary and appropriate action" in cases where unions have demonstrated an inability to organize the unorganized. Other unions cited as "inadequate" were the Office and Professional Workers Union, also left-wing, and the Retail and Wholesale Workers, which generally has been in the right wing.

Although the convention seemed to invite the UPWA to mend its ways, there was no hint from UPWA officials that any change in policy would be forthcoming.

Lawrence Kammet, director of public relations for the UPWA, told a reporter by telephone from New York that the union was doing the "best job we can do" and "there was nothing that happened at the CIO convention that requires that we change our ways."

Kammet criticized "raiding" of UPWA members by other CIO unions, as Flaxer did at the convention. He said the union has lost two to three thousand members in the past eight months. The union is now conducting a fund-raising drive among members—seeking a day's pay from each—so that a special organizing campaign can be launched, he disclosed.

Right-Wing Nucleus

IN WASHINGTON, William Mirengoff, Government economist who headed a right-wing revolt from UPWA last spring, expressed confidence that by the time the executive board winds up its meeting here "the Public Workers will not have jurisdiction over at least Federal workers." He said he would be happy if the board recognized the Government Workers Union, a group within the Shipbuilders Union which he helped to organize after his split with the UPWA, as the "nucleus" of a new organization.

Milton Murray, former president of the Newspaper Guild (CIO), who was with the Shipbuilders Union until a month ago, predicted that if CIO President Murray sets up a new organizing committee for Federal employes there will be "a strong drive put on to organize Federal workers as they've never been organized before."

News Guild Voting

ON THE local scene, meanwhile, members of the Washington Newspaper Guild, which bolted the IUC eight years ago in protest against its leftist leanings, are now voting in a mail referendum whether to reaffiliate.

Local 167, United Office and Professional Workers of America, has already filed an application for IUC membership. And other groups, including the Government Workers Union, which helped to spearhead the drive toward the IUC, are also considering joining.

Their cause was aided recently by the Cafeteria Workers Union here, once strongly leftist and a power in the IUC. The union has changed its leadership and has left the UPWA.

Leaders in the right-wing drive hope it will be sufficiently advanced by January to give them a voice in the nomination of next year's IUC officers. Elections are in February.

As one advocate put it:

"Our purpose is to get an IUC in the Nation's Capital that the national CIO will be proud of."

That's tantamount to an IUC where UPWA delegates take a back seat.

Diabetes Drive Seeks Million Cases of Unwitting Victims

AN UNMERCIFUL curtain of ignorance obscures an estimated one million Americans who are victims of one of mankind's greatest curses.

They are diabetics but they do not know it. They must be discovered if they are to continue to live.

To this purpose, Diabetes Detection Week is being observed this week, beginning Monday. Locally, the campaign will be sponsored by the Diabetes Association of the District.

"This Christmas," said Dr. John A. Reed, local president, "one million Americans will wisely pass up many dinner tidbits. No sweets for them. They know they can't have them.

"But thanks to this knowledge and to two great scientists, Banting and Best, who discovered insulin, those one million diabetics can breathe a prayer of thanks that their lives are healthy and will continue to be so."

The future is not so bright for another million Americans—undiscovered diabetics. Perhaps the symptoms have not asserted themselves with enough authority just yet. Or perhaps certain signs are being ignored through lack of knowledge.

According to Dr. Reed, many severe complications can arise in untreated cases of diabetes. They can be prevented if the case is discovered in time.

THESE are facts you should know about diabetes:

It is a major chronic disease and in numbers affected is outranked only by heart disease and its related blood vessel and kidney disorders, and by cancer and rheumatism. It ranks eighth among causes of death.

It is unique among diseases common in middle and later life in that insulin provides a specific means of control.

As its contribution to Diabetes Detection Week, the District association will sponsor afternoon and evening speaking sessions Tuesday at the District Medical Society. The 2 p. m. session will be for diabetics and the 8 p. m. meeting for physicians.

"No responsible modern educator would propose, promote, or support an isolated course labeled 'sex education'," said Ray Everett, director of the Social Hygiene Society. "Just as sex is an integral part of the wholeness of life, so sex education should be an integral part of the whole educational process.

"In fact, since the expression 'sex education' seems to have become a fighting term, it would be fine if we could drop it from our vocabularies. Then, perhaps due attention to its component parts would be given in the courses that are their logical basis—human reproduction in biology, the social aspects in sociology, family and household economics in home economics, the pubertal changes and the few needed facts about venereal disease in health and physical education."

High School Elective

A STUDY of the curriculum shows that while sex is not avoided in the courses mentioned by Everett, little attention is given to it.

What children learn is dependent more on their own inquisitiveness and the daring of their teachers than on the curriculum.

There is no program in the elementary or junior high schools. The reproductive system is touched on in high school biology but the course is not required for all students.

The home economics department offers a course in child study for high school girls, but it, too, is an elective. Approximately 20 per cent of girl students take the course. It is divided into three units—the family, prenatal and postnatal care and the care and training of young children.

Every high school student is required to take a three-year course in health instruction as part of the physical education program. The course includes sections on family life, personal and community hygiene, nutrition, first aid and mental hygiene.

Birch E. Bayh, head of the department of health and physical education, said there is considerable frank discussion of boy-girl relationships in these classes, which are held separately for boys and girls. The emphasis, Bayh said, is on "clean living and high ideals. Facts about sex are taught more by indirection."

1943 Critic OK's Film

IT WAS this health instruction course that was cut considerably by the Board of Education five years ago after Dr. James A Gannon, physician member of the board, called the previous course "shocking."

The banned course included a three-week study of male and female sex organs and their functions, and an outline of the process of reproduction.

Dr. Gannon, who has seen the film, "Human Growth," has described it as "good biology" and said he has no objection to its use in the schools.

"I rather prefer, though, the present method of showing it to parents," Dr. Gannon said.

A broadened sex education program is advocated by Capt. Rhoda J. Milliken, head of the Police Department Women's Bureau, and by Dr. Ross S. Taggart, venereal disease director for the Health Department.

"In many homes," Captain Milliken said, "there is no one to answer a child's questions about sex. Every child has a right to look to someone for decent information. Frequently the only way children get their questions answered is by other children or undesirable adults."

Dr. Taggart said that he sees a need for educating children about sex at an early age. In tracing back cases of venereal disease, he has found many children with sex histories beginning at the age of 12.

The Weakest Argument

WHILE Everett feels that a good program of sex education will cut down the rate of illegitimacy, venereal disease and prostitution, he says these factors should not be stressed in any educational program.

"They will be the by-products of a program that emphasizes good family living."

"Probably the weakest argument used against extending sound education on sex is that it will lead to undesirable experimentation," Everett said. "This is as absurd as an argument that sound moral teaching leads to immorality.

"There is no pornographic kick about a scientific vocabulary."

Tough Sledding For Weatherman With a Family

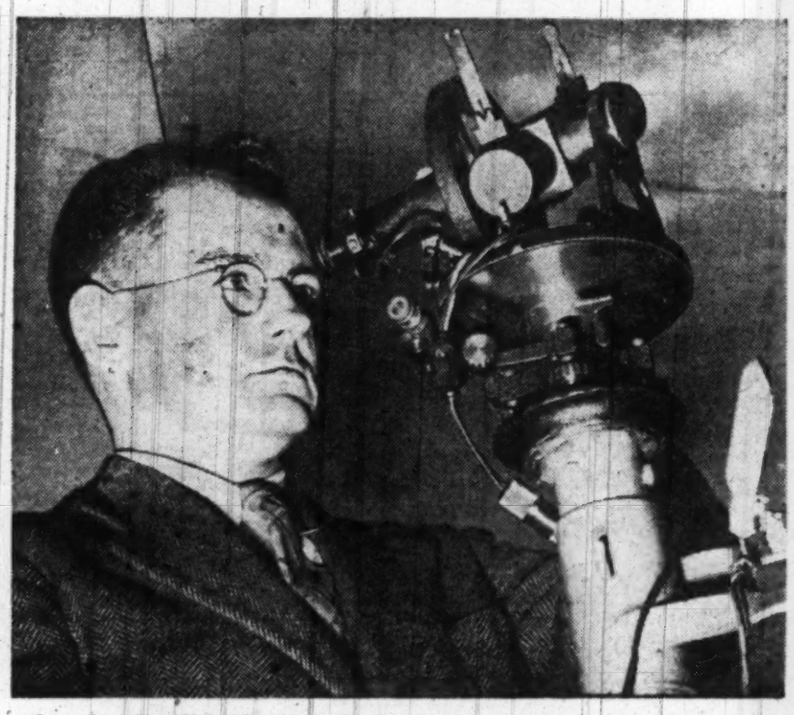
By John London
Post Reporter

WHEN Ernest C. Johnson leaves home for work, his wife Jessie always asks: "Darling, should I wear the heavy coat or the light one today?" His daughter, Jean, 6, eager owner of a new sled, asks: "Daddy, whenyagonna put the snow in?"

And when Johnson visits his kinfolk at Tye River, Va., the farmer up the road wants to know if it's a good day to cut his hay.

In fact, just about everywhere Ernest C. Johnson, 40, goes, questions about the weather are sure to follow—his work never ends, even when he's not working.

Fortunately, the barrel-chested former college athlete likes his job as Weather Bureau prophet at National Airport. "It's a game," he finds. "You win and lose just often enough to want to come back and win more—or at least try."



In a slotted steel "bubble" atop the Weather Bureau offices at National Airport, Ernest C. Johnson follows a weather balloon with a theodolite

Invasion Forecaster

JOHNSON, who used to play football and basketball for VMI, wins with the weather about 85 per cent of the time—officially, as supervisor of aviation forecasting, and privately, as weather counsel to family and friends.

Most of all, he likes predicting snow and ice. "My favorite hobby," he explains, "is ice skating."

Next best, he enjoys figuring what days will be driest in the dry months of October, November and May. Those are the days he vacations.

His toughest weather anticipating was during the war, forecasting for the invasions of southern and northern France—after he had been cleared by the FBI.

"They checked up on me clean back to my birth," he says. "And they like to scared my brother-in-law to death back in Tye River, when they questioned him about me. He thought they were fixing to lock me up."

Johnson drifted into his life's work riding tail winds of depression and happenstance.

"I had a B. S. degree in chemistry from VMI, was taking premed courses at George Washington," he recalls. "Then the storm came, the depression of '29."

He had to quit school. Casting about for a job, he took civil service exams. Next thing he knew he was a junior weather observer.

Advice From Clients

FIRST assigned to the Richmond station, he studied law on the side and passed the Virginia bar; then he was assigned to Greensboro, N. C., and, since 1940, here. Johnson, who lives at 1461 N. Lancaster st., Arlington, has just learned he'll be promoted in January and placed in charge of the Albany, N. Y., Weather Bureau station.

While here he's built up a steady clientele of telephone callers, not all of whom phone for advice about the weather.

"My favorite problem," he confides, "is a somewhat psychopathic woman who calls almost daily with her own advice, if not orders."

The other day she phoned to inform Johnson he could clear the Washington atmosphere "merely by going to New York, taking the Statue of Liberty and turning it upside down in the ocean.

"Another time she phoned and complained that the stars were disappearing. She ordered me to 'turn the clouds off.'

"Ah, if I only had the power . . ." sighs Johnson.

U. S. Employe Union a Poser for CIO

By Adrienne Tassler
Post Reporter

A TWO-PRONGED offensive against the left-wing United Public Workers of America, subject of a verbal lashing last week by CIO President Philip Murray, may be launched here shortly.

Major threat to the militant union's sovereignty is expected to develop at a meeting next month of the 51-member CIO executive board. On a local level, the UPWA may find itself challenged at about the same time by at least a handful of heretofore quiescent right-wing Washington unions.

A movement is now under way to have some half dozen right-wing groups join the Industrial Union Council—a CIO central body here which is now virtually run by UPWA locals. Aim of the drive is to wrest control of the IUC from these left-wing unions.

At present, some observers feel the IUC is simply serving as a political mouthpiece for the UPWA.

A Way Around

THERE is every indication that when the CIO executive board convenes in Washington, it will meet head on the problem of declining CIO strength in the Government field—attributed by many to leftist union leadership. UPWA President Abram Flaxer is a member of the board.

National CIO officials say it's an entirely new and difficult problem which the executive board is scheduled to tackle here January 26—and declined to predict just how it would be handled.

Since affiliated unions are autonomous, their charters cannot be lifted "outright," a spokesman said. However, the board could issue a charter to a new union, awarding it the UPWA's jurisdiction, or it could establish a CIO organizing committee to take over UPWA's job.

Standing by Guns

LAST month's CIO convention gave the executive board authority to "investigate and take necessary and appropriate action" in cases where unions have demonstrated an inability to organize the unorganized. Other unions cited as "inadequate" were the Office and Professional Workers Union, also left-wing, and the Retail and Wholesale Workers, which generally has been in the right wing.

Although the convention seemed to invite the UPWA to mend its ways, there was no hint from UPWA officials that any change in policy would be forthcoming.

Lawrence Kammet, director of public relations for the UPWA, told a reporter by telephone from New York that the union was doing the "best job we can do" and "there was nothing that happened at the CIO convention that requires that we change our ways."

Kammet criticized "raiding" of UPWA members by other CIO unions, as Flaxer did at the convention. He said the union has lost two to three thousand members in the past eight months. The union is now conducting a fund-raising drive among members—seeking a day's pay from each—so that a special organizing campaign can be launched, he disclosed.

Right-Wing Nucleus

IN WASHINGTON, William Mirengoff, Government economist who headed a right-wing revolt from UPWA last spring, expressed confidence that by the time the executive board winds up its meeting here "the Public Workers will not have jurisdiction over at least Federal workers." He said he would be happy if the board recognized the Government Workers Union, a group within the Shipbuilders Union which he helped to organize after his split with the UPWA, as the "nucleus" of a new organization.

Milton Murray, former president of the Newspaper Guild (CIO), who was with the Shipbuilders Union until a month ago, predicted that if CIO President Murray sets up a new organizing committee for Federal employes there will be "a strong drive put on to organize Federal workers as they've never been organized before."

News Guild Voting

ON THE local scene, meanwhile, members of the Washington Newspaper Guild, which bolted the IUC eight years ago in protest against its leftist leanings, are now voting in a mail referendum whether to reaffiliate.

Local 167, United Office and Professional Workers of America, has already filed an application for IUC membership. And other groups, including the Government Workers Union, which helped to spearhead the drive toward the IUC, are also considering joining.

Their cause was aided recently by the Cafeteria Workers Union here, once strongly leftist and a power in the IUC. The union has changed its leadership and has left the UPWA.

Leaders in the right-wing drive hope it will be sufficiently advanced by January to give them a voice in the nomination of next year's IUC officers. Elections are in February.

As one advocate put it:

"Our purpose is to get an IUC in the Nation's Capital that the national CIO will be proud of."

That's tantamount to an IUC where UPWA delegates take a back seat.

Diabetes Drive Seeks Million Cases of Unwitting Victims

AN UNMERCIFUL curtain of ignorance obscures an estimated one million Americans who are victims of one of mankind's greatest curses.

They are diabetics but they do not know it. They must be discovered if they are to continue to live.

To this purpose, Diabetes Detection Week is being observed this week, beginning Monday. Locally, the campaign will be sponsored by the Diabetes Association of the District.

"This Christmas," said Dr. John A. Reed, local president, "one million Americans will wisely pass up many dinner tidbits. No sweets for them. They know they can't have them.

"But thanks to this knowledge and to two great scientists, Banting and Best, who discovered insulin, those one million diabetics can breathe a prayer of thanks that their lives are healthy and will continue to be so."

The future is not so bright for another million Americans—undiscovered diabetics. Perhaps the symptoms have not asserted themselves with enough authority just yet. Or perhaps certain signs are being ignored through lack of knowledge.

According to Dr. Reed, many severe complications can arise in untreated cases of diabetes. They can be prevented if the case is discovered in time.

THESE are facts you should know about diabetes:

It is a major chronic disease and in numbers affected is outranked only by heart disease and its related blood vessel and kidney disorders, and by cancer and rheumatism. It ranks eighth among causes of death.

It is unique among diseases common in middle and later life in that insulin provides a specific means of control.

As its contribution to Diabetes Detection Week, the District association will sponsor afternoon and evening speaking sessions Tuesday at the District Medical Society. The 2 p. m. session will be for diabetics and the 8 p. m. meeting for physicians.

Irish Tie USC in Last Minute, 14 to 14

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

TRUSTEES OF THE estate of the late George Richards will make disposition of 30 per cent of the stock in the Washington Baseball Club in May, but the control of President Clark Griffith will be unaffected . . . on the first Tuesday in January, Mr. Griffith will be reelected president of the club for the thirty-seventh consecutive year . . . Dick Richards, the West Coast radio tycoon, is remembered as the former owner of the Detroit Lions, who once ordered the team's band outfitted with the biggest bass drum in the United States. There was a slight delay. After the drum was built, it was so big they couldn't move it out of the factory . . . General Manager George Weiss the other day made another pitch for First Baseman Mickey Vernon of the Nats, but the Washington Club is more intrigued by offers from Detroit . . . despite the furore over Gorgeous George, who has been packing the Nation's wrestling arenas, Primo Carnera is the rassler who still commands the biggest percentage of the gate. Carnera works for 30 per cent, George 27½.

POVICH

JUST HOW THE Redskins hope to catch up with the Champion Philadelphia Eagles in the forseeable future isn't quite clear. In fact, every time you hear of a new Eagle player, the Redskins' chances get more remote . . . now it appears that Chuck Bednarik, everybody's two-time all-America center, will wind up at Philly as well as Michigan's great center, Alex Sarkisian. The Eagles also have the draft rights to Michigan's All-America end, Dick Rifenberg, and, according to Publicist Ed Hogan, also have the league rights to Charley Justice, the terrific Tar Heel . . . The Tournament of Champions made a $5000 settlement with Jersey Joe Walcott after Gus Lesnevich's injury called their fight off . . . Sugar Ray Robinson, who fights Steve Belloise on Thursday night for the T. of C., may be facing a jinx. In the last two middleweight fights in Jersey, the betting favorite was knocked out, with Tony Zale stopping Rocky Graziano in 10 rounds, and Marcel Cerdan flattening Zale in 12 . . . Jim Castiglia's sweet performance against the Bears last week was no compliment to the Redskin coaches who for some vague reasons kept him out of the previous three games . . . The Army-Navy 21-21 tie of 22 years ago was famous for the fact that the late Knute Rockne was a spectator. Rockne was scouting Army on a day when Notre Dame was playing a supposedly push-over Carnegie Tech team which licked the Irish 19-0. Rockne never again entrusted his squad to lieutenants.

MATCHMAKER GABE MENENDEZ can take a bow for the match he is putting into Turner's Arena tomorrow night. He is tossing the hard-hitting Archie Moore in with Bob Amos, the much sought-after Detroit lightheavyweight who has lost only one fight and is rocketing to the top of the division . . . On the betting front: The Rams are 7-point favorites over the Redskins today; the Eagles are 21 points over the Boston Yankees, the Bears 17 points over Detroit, the Cardinals 17 points over Green Bay and the Steelers-Giants are a toss-up . . . in the All-America Conference, Buffalo is 3½ points favorite over Baltimore, Cleveland 17½ over Brooklyn, New York 10½ over the Rockets and San Francisco 10½ over Los Angeles Dons . . . and Ezzard Charles, who was a 3-2 favorite over Joe Baski in their Friday fight at the Garden, has now been restored to a 3-1 choice . . . the current rating on the big bowl games: Northwestern over California by 7 points; North Carolina over Oklahoma by 1½ points; Southern Methodist favored over Oregon by 7; Georgia over Texas by 7; William and Mary over Okla. A. & M. by 6½; Missouri over Clemson by the same figure, and Baylor 6-point favorite over Wake Forest . . . Kenny Washington of the Rams, who will be honored in Los Angeles next Sunday when he winds up his pro football career, he says, will then go into a tie with old Mel Hein of the Giants in the number of their farewell appearances.

COL. LEO DE ORSEY, No. 2 stockholder in the Redskins, is claiming a spectator record for witnessing fumbles on consecutive days. Last Saturday he saw Northwestern fumble the ball the first four times they had it and Notre Dame score four times, and the next day at Chicago he saw the Bears score three touchdowns on Redskin fumbles in the first four minutes . . . Washington's finest little football player must be Mike Warner, the alert tackle of the 120-pound Blessed Sacrament Team of the C. Y. C. League. In six games, he recovered seven fumbles, blocked three kicks, and the other day not only made the tackle on the opening kick-off against St. Anthony, but recovered the fumble that resulted . . . three times during the season he has been named the outstanding player in single games . . . Tom Yawkey, who has more than a friendly interest in the Boston U. football team that plays in his Fenway Park, is attempting to line up a Notre Dame-Boston U. series at Boston . . . Curtis Stone, who ran America's fastest 2 miles indoors during 1948 when he won at the Millrose games in 9:11.7, will head up the top-ranking 2-mile field in the Evening Star games at the National Guard Armory January 15 . . . the Star games are putting the Capital back on the track-and-field map . . . any day now, Station WWDC will announce its contract to broadcast the Nats' games in 1949 has been renewed, with Arch McDonald returning as maestro at the mike.

Bill Gay's 87-Yard Run Paves Way to Tying Score

By Alex Kahn

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Southern California's Trojans turned Notre Dame's supermen into mere mortals today by holding the Irish to a startling 14-14 tie.

The result ended the longest winning streak in Irish history at 21 games.

And though victory was not USC's—it might have been but for the indomitable spirit of the Irish, who flashed back to score a final tying touchdown in the last minute of the ball game after Southern California had gone ahead, 14 to 7, with just two minutes to go.

It was an afternoon of never-to-be-forgotten madness, most of it packed into the wild fourth period, for the 100,571 fans who jammed Memorial Coliseum for the traditional battle.

But even though the Irish lost much of their luster by failing to beat the 21-point Southern California underdogs as they had all of the other opponents for more than two seasons, they proved conclusively that the legendary spirit of Notre Dame is no small factor.

Pass-Interference Helps

For when they faced defeat in that last fateful moment, they had the wherewithal to salvage at least a tie.

And Notre Dame could thank its lucky stars for a pas-interference penalty in the end zone for setting up its tying touchdown 35 seconds before the game ended.

Halfback Bill Gay was the miracle man who made an 87-yard kickoff return in those closing minutes and gave the Irish the opportunity to keep from being defeated by scoring a last-ditch touchdown.

The entire Southern California team was responsible for the magnificent showing, but it was Sub Quarterback Dean Dill, Halfback Jack Kirby and Fullback Bill Martin who were responsible for the two Trojan touchdowns.

Martin Scores Twice

Dill's passes to Kirby sent Southern California deep into Irish territory and Martin rammed over both touchdowns, with Dill making the two all-important conversions.

Kirby got the Trojans started in the fourth period by intercepting an Irish pass and running to the Notre Dame 42.

Dill then heaved a 20-yard pass to Kirby, who got to the Notre Dame 18. And it was Dill who raced to the 5-yard line when he couldn't find a receiver open. Then Martin went to work and in three plays rammed over a touchdown to tie the score at 7 to 7.

But Southern California was not content to rest there, coming back in the last three minutes of play. Kirby squirmed for a 15-yard gain to the Irish 31. On the next play End Ernie Tolman took Dill's pass on the 18. Dill then raced to the 12 and Martin teamed with Halfback Art Battle to work the ball down to the 4, where Martin took it over.

The huge crowd went wild as

Earthquake Shakes Stadium

Los Angeles, Dec. 4 (AP).—Ten minutes after Notre Dame's mighty Irish were held to a 14-14 tie by USC here today a real earthquake shook huge Memorial Coliseum.

The stadium has just emptied itself of the howling mob, all on the verge of hysteria, when the quake started.

High on the rim of the stadium, the press box seemed to waltz dizzily back and forth, the chalk stripes on the field below seemingly—and perhaps they did—to move in crazy, reverse review.

And the scoreboard, just as crazy, showed: Notre Dame 14, USC 14.

Central's Late Rally Routs Gonzaga, 26-6

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

The alert Central Vikings turned two interceptions into touchdowns, brought a "dead" ball to life for another score, all in the last 13 minutes, and defeated Gonzaga's Purple Eagles, 26-6, before 8500 fans at Griffith Stadium yesterday.

Until Terry Gregory intercepted a Bill Haley pass, and raced 36 yards down the right sideline for a Central touchdown with a minute left in the third quarter, things looked dark for the Vikings. But that timely sprint turned the tide in Central's favor and put the Vikings in front to stay, 12-6.

The most spectacular and most controversial play came only two minutes later, and saw the quick-thinking Jimmy Pantos pick up a loose ball under the very noses of his Gonzaga opponents, and then walk, trot and finally sprint 60 yards for another Central touchdown.

Here's how it happened:

A Gonzaga counter-drive stalled on the Eagles' 47, where Tom O'Keefe punted. The ball shot almost straight up, and both teams waited for it to come down, on the Central 45. Gonzaga Tackle Bill Muller then touched the ball and everyone watched the ball roll to the Viking 40.

Everyone seemed to think the ball was dead—everyone but Pantos. Jimmy nonchalantly picked up the ball, walked through the middle of the unsuspecting Gonzaga team. Then, while everyone in the ballpark wondered what was happening, he picked up speed. When he crossed into the end zone the officials signaled a touchdown.

The Gonzaga team protested that Referee Lewis (Knocky) Thomas had signaled the ball "dead" on the 40, but Thomas stated that he'd made no such signal, and Pete Chaconas stepped back and booted the conversion for Central.

The Interhigh Champion Vikings drew first blood after only 2:15 of action as Pantos' passing and running guided them 45 yards to the Gonzaga three. Jack Wert bucked over right tackle for the goal, and the Vikings led, 6-0.

Gonzaga's first threat came

See HIGHS, Page C-3, Column 1.

End of Long Run

This is the end of Halfback Bill Gay's 87-yard return of a Southern California kickoff in the closing minutes of yesterday's 14-14 tie game between Notre Dame and the Trojans. The brilliant run set up Notre Dame's tying touchdown. Halfback Don Doll of the Trojans hauls Gay down on the 13-yard line.

'49 Redskins Won't Appear In Baltimore

The Washington Redskins, who for years have participated in a charity football game in Baltimore, will not play in the 1949 game, it was learned last night.

The Washington and Baltimore Tents of the Variety Club have sponsored the annual benefit game in Baltimore but next year separate games are planned.

The Baltimore Tent has arranged a game featuring its own Colts of the All-American Conference.

The Washington Tent hopes to reach an agreement with the Redskins for a game to be played in Maryland University's new stadium, now under construction.

Redskin officials have been disinclined to have their team appear in Washington proper in an exhibition game prior to their first appearance here in the National Football League season.

The Washington Tent would like to arrange a meeting of the Redskins and Chicago Bears in the Maryland stadium, which will seat 35,000 when completed.

Frank Boucher, chief barker of the Washington Tent, said last night that a meeting will be held December 13 to discuss plans for next year's game.

Terps Lose Opener, 67-49 To Temple

Philadelphia, Dec. 4.—The University of Maryland's basketball team got off to an inauspicious start tonight when they lost their opening game to Temple University, 67 to 49, in the opening college basketball double-header at Philadelphia Convention Hall.

The victory was Temple's second straight of the current season.

The Owls' scoring attack was paced by Nelson Bobb and Ed Lerner, Bobb scoring 20 points while Lerner connected for 21. Bob Murray scored 14 points to lead the Terps.

Maryland kept pecking away at the Temple lead and finally whittled the lead down to two points on a beautiful shot by Charlie, Mack. However, Lerner came back and scored three successive long shots to give Temple a 29-22 lead at half time.

Bobb and Lerner went into high gear in the second half. Bobb hit with two set shots shortly after the period began and Lerner followed up with a left-hand shot to increase the lead to 13 points.

Caps Outlast Bullets, 83-82, for 15th in Row

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

The undefeated Washington Caps won a basketball Donneybrook last night, sliding by the Baltimore Bullets, 83 to 82, to run up their fifteenth consecutive victory.

With 4975 Uline Arena spectators on the verge of nervous prostration from the wild exhibition, the locals came from behind three times in the last quarter to keep their record unblemished.

The issue wasn't decided until the very last second. At that point, Baltimore's Fred Lewis sent up a side court set shot which teased the rim, finally rolling off just as the game ended.

At half time, when the Caps led 48 to 37, there were only a few in the house who gave the Bullets a chance. The Baltimoreans, however, caught fire in the last period and came within an eyelash of messing up Washington's wonderful winning streak.

The lead changed hands nine times during the game, eight in the last period. With 90 seconds to go, mountainous Kleggie Hermsen hooked in the basket which brought the Caps the slim lead they clung to tenaciously the rest of the rough way.

In the final analysis, however, it was lose-jointed, long-legged Bones McKinney, who brought the Caps their victory.

Bones hammered in 21 points, one less than Baltimore's Connie Simmons made to lead all scorers, but Bones' points came at times when the Bullets threatened to overtake the Caps. Five times McKinney connected on his favorite jump shot when the Caps were only two points in front.

And in the waning moments of the thriller, it was McKinney who took up the slack under the back boards, retrieving practically every rebound when Hermsen was just plain pooped out.

It was easily Bones' best game in his three years of basketball service at the ice house.

The game had a little of everything in it. The audience, which included about 1000 Baltimoreans, was in a state of frenzy from the opening whistle and maintained their hysteria throughout the tiff.

Two near fights were averted. Coach Buddy Jeannette and Freddie Scolari were ready to tee off on each other early in the game, but the officials parted the willing combatants. Minutes later, Irv Torgoff, a member of last year's Cap cast, and Hermsen, who stretches over Torgoff by almost a foot, were ready to punch it out. This scrap was averted, too.

Late in the third period, Freddie Lewis dribbled in for a layup to tie the score, 59-59, and then the fireworks began. The Bullets with Hal Tidrick, the irrepressible Simmons and Johnnie Ezersky featuring their drive, vaulted into a 64-60 advantage as the session ended.

Sonny Hertzberg opened the last quarter with a set shot and Ole Bones followed with a two-point jumper that tied it again and the race was on in earnest this time.

With two minutes to go, Simmons flipped in his 22nd point and the Bullets, confident now vaulted in front, 78-77. Then it was that Hermsen rammed in his hook shot and the Bullets, try as they did, never led again.

American U. Wins, 55-52, Over Poly

Brooklyn, Dec. 4.—American University ended Brooklyn Poly's three-game winning streak here tonight with a 55-52 victory over the Engineers.

The invading Eagles of Washington were ahead all the way, but never by more than six points. Bob Lamon, Washington, D. C., native, and LeRoy Ishman paced American with 18 and 14 points.

The Eagles' accuracy at the foul line was a big factor in their victory. They cashed in on 13 out of 19, while Brooklyn Poly could only make 16 out of 27. George Haun, who took scoring honors for Poly with 18 points, suffered a bad fall just before the final gun, and four stitches were needed to close a head laceration.

It was American's third victory in four starts.

Battle in Baltimore

Buffalo Can Clinch Eastern Flag by Beating Colts Today

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Buffalo Bills will attempt to wrap up the Eastern Division title of the All-America Football Conference tomorrow in Baltimore in the most important game in either the conference or rival National League.

The Bills, leading the East by a half game, take on the runner-up Baltimore Colts in the final game of the season for both clubs. A victory or tie will sew it up for the Bills and land them in a playoff berth against the Western Division Champion Cleveland Browns.

Should Baltimore triumph to tie up the race, a playoff will be held in Baltimore on December 12 for the title with the championship game taking place in Cleveland the following Sunday.

Cleveland's unbeaten powerhouse will close out the season against the Dodgers in Brooklyn. The Yankees round out their campaign in Chicago and San Francisco goes against the Dons in Los Angeles.

No matter what team wins it will mark the first time that the New York Yankees will not represent the East in the Championship game against Cleveland. The Bills eliminated the Yanks last Sunday.

The attention in the National League will be directed on the Chicago Bears and Chicago Cardinals, tied for the Western half leadership.

The defending champion Cards play host to the Green Bay Packers and the Bears take on the weak Lions in Detroit. Both Windy City elevens are expected to win. The two will clash the following week in Chicago in what probably will decide the title.

Other National League games find New York at Pittsburgh, Los Angeles at Washington and Philadelphia at Boston. Philadelphia clinched its second straight Eastern division title last week.

Leahy Praises Jeff Cravath

Los Angeles, Dec. 4. (U.P.).—Coach Frank Leahy of Notre Dame expressed pride rather than disappointment today as his Irish were held to a 14-14 tie by an inspired University of Southern California squad.

"I am proud of the way my boys came back in the final seconds," he said. "It was not an inferior game for us. Southern California was high and well coached and played a tremendous game. Coach Jeff Cravath is to be congratulated.

"But we're still unbeaten," Leahy said with a smile, pointing out Notre Dame has gone 28 games without defeat. Leahy thought Southern California's defense was set up perfectly to stop his team's offensive play. He said hard-tackling made his boys fumble six times.

Cravath, pleased but restrained, paid credit to the long run by Billy Gay that set up Notre Dame's tying touchdown.

"Don't take any credit away from my boys," he said. Give it to Gay. We had the game, and he took it away," Cravath commented.

For 'Moral Victory'

Army Team Decides to Give Navy Football Cadets Won on Coin Toss After 21-21 Tie

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 4 (AP).—Thanks to Army's "very fine" sportsmanship, Navy will keep the football used in last week's Army-Navy game.

Although West Point won the pigskin in a coin toss after the 21-21 tie, Army players decided the Naval Academy deserved the ball for "the great Navy effort" and for its "moral victory."

Traditionally, the winning team gets the football in use at the final gun.

"A very fine gesture," said Midshipman Pete Williams today. "We are surprised and very happy."

In a letter to co-Captains Pete Williams and Scott Emerson, Cadet Captain Bill Yeoman said, "You earned this one," and promised to send the pigskin to Annapolis.

The ball will be placed in a trophy case here at MacDonough Hall.

In "a word of caution," Yeoman hinted that Navy can't rest on its laurels. "We have found that a football takes peculiar bounces," he said.

Text of Yeoman's letter:

"Dear Navy:

"Like any football squad at the season's outset, we were shooting for a perfect score, an untied as well as unbeaten record. After each victorious game the odds against us fell and our stock and hopes rose as Capt. Bill Yeoman came off the field with the ball tucked in his arm and a grin on his face. Each of those victory trophies were happily received by a team that felt it had sincerely earned it.

"But the ball we wanted most of all was the Army-Navy pigskin for two good reasons: (1) It would complete our perfect season, and (2) Navy was our opponent.

"Yet when we won that ball, it wasn't exactly in the manner planned and did not do justice to the great Navy effort.

Consequently, we are sending the ball to you. After all, it was you who made the news Saturday, not us, and if there ever has been such a thing as a moral victory, you had one. It all comes down to one fact. We sincerely think you earned this one.

"However, we send it along with a word of due caution. We have found that a football takes peculiar bounces.

WILLIAM F. YEOMAN,
Captain.

Santa Claus Shares Billing With 'Skins and Rams Today

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

Santa Claus will make his annual appearance at Griffith Stadium today as the Washington Redskins close out their home season in a 2-p. m. metting with the Los Angeles Rams.

For the fans, Santa Claus will appear as the bewhiskered, rolypoly gent of legend. The jolly fellow who parachuted from a helicopter (and missed the stadium) at last year's Redskin Christmas show this time will arrive by more orthodox means.

For the Redskin management, Santa Claus will be the approximately 33,000 paying customers who will turn out for a game that means absolutely nothing in the National Football League championship race. Both teams are out of it. Washington has the most to gain as it seeks to clinch second place in the eastern division.

It should see a good show, nevertheless. The Rams, in their first appearance here since 1944, are rated mere 7-point favorites and so anything can happen with both clubs leaning heavily on aerial offense.

Los Angeles, as a matter of fact, is the passingest team in the N. F. L. With Bob Waterfield and Jim Hardy alternating in the passing department, the Rams have thrown a total of 353 passes this year. Waterfield has completed 77 out of 161 for 1183 yards and nine touchdowns. Hardy has clicked on 100 out of 192 for 1252 yards and 10 touchdowns.

46,000 See Ed Salem Pace Tide

Birmingham, Ala., Dec. 4 (AP).—Alabama celebrated renewal of gridiron relations with Auburn, after a 41-year lapse, with an overwhelming 55 to 0 victory today before 46,000 fans.

The victors dominated play throughout in all departments, but it was their pass attack, with Halfback Ed Salem doing most of the throwing, which turned the contest into a rout.

The two State schools broke off athletic relations back in 1907, after a 6-6 tie football game here. Auburn still leads in the series, seven wins to five.

Salem, 187-pound sophomore playing before a home-town crowd, completed 8 of 10 passes thrown for 159 yards and three touchdowns and scored another marker on a sweep around end. He kicked seven extra points in a row before his eighth attempt was blocked.

It was Auburn's worst defeat since 1917, when Georgia Tech plastered the Tigers, 68 to 7. It also gave old-time Alabama followers ample revenge for a 53-5 trimming at the hands of Auburn back in 1900.

Travis Tidwell, Auburn back who led the Nation in yardage gained as a freshman in 1946, was injured in the first half, but he had not been able to get anything resembling a scoring drive under way before his injury.

The Tigers never managed to get beyond the Alabama 40, and that one penetration followed two 15-yard penalties against the Tide. Jack Brown, whose fine punting was a feature of the first half, kicked from his 8 out to midfield.

The statistics, like the score, were all Alabama. The Tide netted 210 yards rushing and 194 passing for a total of 404, nearly a quarter of a mile. Auburn gained 81 rushing, but lost 78, for a net of just 3 yards, and completed 5 of 19 passes for 45 yards. 'Bama intercepted four Tiger passes.

Moore Faces Amos Here Monday

Archie Moore, who despite his many years of campaigning is still one of the best light heavyweights in the business, tackles ambitious Bob Amos of Detroit in the 10-round feature at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Twenty-one-year-old Amos is anything but a soft touch for the journeyman Moore. Bob has been beaten only once in 39 pro outings. He showed in Washington last summer and scored an impressive three-round knockout over Al Edwards, Washington, at Griffith Stadium.

Moore boxed at the 14th and W streets arena five weeks ago, but was disqualified for fouling Lloyd Gibson, Kansas City. He drew a 30-day suspension and this is his first test since the NBA ban was lifted.

A victory over Moore would establish Amos as one of the better 175-pound contenders and the young Detroiter is out to gain that reputation. He's been working at Madame Bey's New Jersey camp.

Moore, conqueror of Jimmy Bivins, Curtis Sheppard, Lloyd Marshall and many other lightheavies and heavyweights of prominence, has a tentative date with Freddie Mills, 175-pound champion, in England.

Supporting bouts are topped by a five-rounder between "Sonny Boy" Bunn and Jesse Baker of Roanoke. Jackie Ford faces "Slugger" White and Roy Wirt meets Grantham Jones in other fives.

British Football Team Displays Height of Optimism

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Leytonstone amateur football team demonstrated the height of confidence today.

They eliminated Watford Professionals, 2-1, in the first round of the Football Association Cup tournament, and immediately distributed handbills to fans announcing the next match with Newport.

The bills were printed two weeks ago.

Dark Elected Rookie of Year

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Alvin Dark, the Boston Braves' talented young shortstop, today was named Rookie of the year for 1948 by the Baseball Writers Association.

The 25-year-old freshman who hit .324 for the pennant-winning Braves, won by a comfortable margin. Dark received 27 of the 48 votes by the same writers' committees who selected the most valuable player in each Major League.

Gene Bearden, southpaw pitching star of Cleveland's World Series triumph, was second. He polled eight votes. However, all balloting was done during the last week of the season and thus did not take into consideration World Series performances. In the regular season he won 17 and lost 7.

Bearden, of course, flashed brightest at the very end of the year. After defeating the Boston Red Sox in the tie playoff game to decide the pennant, he shut out the Braves in the third series game. Then he came back in a relief role to save the day for Bob Lemon in the sixth game when the Tribe won the series.

Third honors went to Richie Ashburn, the Philadelphia Phils' two-headed speedster.

Lou Brissie, Connie Mack's brilliant young left-hander who has to wear a heavy protective brace on his leg as the result of battle wounds, tied for fourth place with Bill Goodman of the Boston Red Sox. Each had three votes.

Rockets Beaten, 28-7, By Yankees

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Running up a 21-0 margin in the first half, the New York Yankees ended their All-America Football Conference season today when they handed the Chicago Rockets a 28-7 trouncing.

The Rockets, who have won only two games in three years of conference competition, thus ended their current campaign with 13 losses in 14 starts and their eleventh successive defeat.

The Yankees moved to within a half game of the Baltimore Colts in the league's eastern division and kept alive their hopes for a possible second-place tie in the final standings.

New York's three first-half touchdowns resulted from a pass interception and two Rocket fumbles recovered. In the first quarter Bob Kennedy snared Jess Freitas' toss and brought it back to midfield. A long pass, Pete Layden to Bruce Alford, put the ball on the six, and Layden went across from the 3. Lowell Tew tallied both the Yankees' second-quarter scores after fumbles by Freitas and Jim Mello had been recovered on the Rockets' 37 and 33.

New York's fourth touchdown came midway in the third period when Layden's pass to Jack Russell, good for 63 yards, featured an 80-yard drive. Harvey Johnson, conversion specialist made all four extra points good to run his total to 77 in succession.

Chicago finally hit pay dirt a minute and a half after the fourth quarter opened by driving 80 yards in 11 plays, Jim Mello going over from the 1. Jim McCarthy converted.

Nation's Top Streak Ends at 41; Toledo Wins Third Glass Bowl

Evansville, Ind., Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The 41-game winning streak of Missouri Valley's Vikings—longest in collegiate football history—came to an end today when undergod Evansville College scored a 13-to-7 triumph in the Refrigerator Bowl game.

8he 41 straight victories were compiled under Coach Volney Ashford and topped the previous mark of 39 straight set by the University of Washington huskies under gloomy Gil Dobie in 1909.

Actually, 11 of the Viking victories were set before Ashford went away for military service and the other 30 were rung up after he came back. During the war years a team of naval trainees lost some games but the school officials disavowed those games because football was on an informal basis and no effort made to field winning teams.

The Marshall, Mo., eleven was last beaten in 1941 by the Jefferson Barracks, Mo., Army post team.

Evansville, which won five of eight games during the regular season, went to work early. The Aces scored twice before the half ended and gave Coach Volney Ashford's boys no chance in those 30 minutes to exhibit their long-successful attack.

It wasn't until late in the game that the Vikings finally managed to score, but then it was too late. The Aces' early-game superiority was enough to subdue the Nation's winningest college grid team.

In the sixth minute of the game, after the teams had seesawed in midfield, Evansville's left halfback, Gene Logel, took a punt return, and lateraled to Quarterback Joe Unfried who raced 80 yards for the initial score. Don Galey's conversion attempt was wide.

Evansville struck again in the second period on a sustained drive, culminated when Fullback Frank Endress smashed over from the 1-yard line. Galey's conversion was good.

Toledo, Ohio, Dec. 4 (AP).—Coach Skip Stahley's University of Toledo's Rockets made it three for three in the third annual Glass Bowl today, by taking a 27-14 decision from Oklahoma City University before 8500.

Lee Pete's passing was the major factor in the victory. The clever Rocket quarterback tossed two laterals and two forwards on scoring plays in the first, second and fourth periods.

The Rockets had too much power for the Chiefs, especially in the line, and much of the visitors' gains were made on Jim Wade's passes. However, Wade scored both touchdowns on runs of 8 and 9 yards in the final period.

Pete tossed laterals to Jim Hays and Chuck Hardy and 12-yard and 16-yard forwards to Don Martin and Hardy for Toledo's scores. John Shutt of the Rockets added three extra points on place-kicks, and Frank Bruno added the Chiefs' two extra points.

Wade was a standout for the losers. His passing and speedy end sweeps kept the Rockets under pressure all afternoon, despite the fact their lead never was in danger after the halfway mark in the first period.

The Rockets previously defeated Bates and New Hampshire in the Glass Bowl.

Wilberforce Upset, 20-19

Norfolk, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—Striking for two touchdowns in the final four minutes, the Hampton Institute Pirates upset a previously undefeated Wilberforce State College team, 20 to 19, in the first annual Fish Bowl game here today.

Favored by two touchdowns before the kickoff, Wilberforce looked as though it would make the predictions good by taking a 13-to-0 halftime lead. However, the Pirates came back with a tally in the third period and then staged their final scoring blast after a third Wilberforce touchdown in the third period.

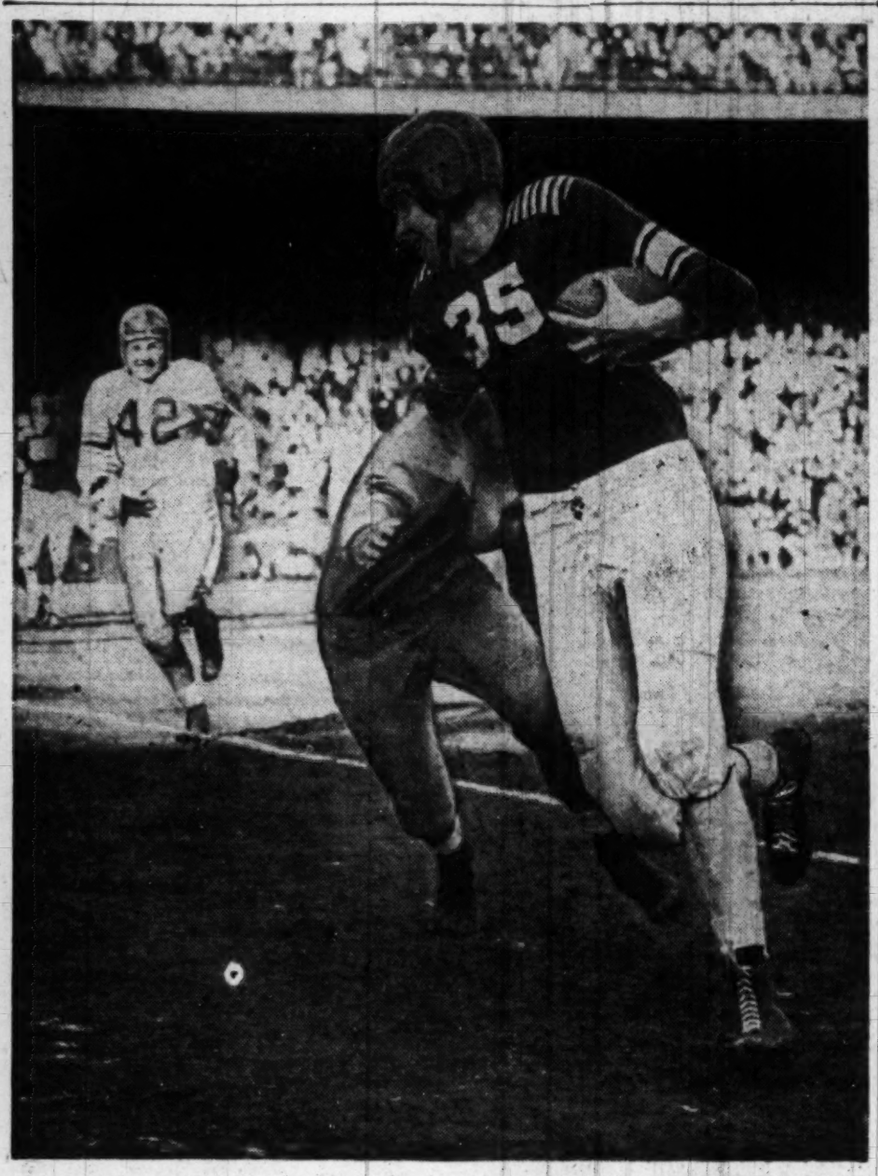
Clemson Whips The Citadel, 20 to 0, Wins Conference Title



By Harry Goodwin—The Washington Post

ENDS MEET—Gonzaga End Tom Welch tackles Central End Franny Gleason (36) after Franny caught a first quarter pass from Jim Pantos, and ran 24 yards to the Gonzaga 3. Coming in to help Welch in case he needs it is Gonzaga Center Tom Smith (42). Welch's tackle staved off a Central touchdown for only another play because seconds later, Jack Wert scored and gave Central a 6-0 lead. Central won, 26-6, at Griffith Stadium.

Matthews Scores All 3 Touchdowns

Charleston, S. C., Dec. 4 (U.P.)—Clemson's Tigers wrapped up their first perfect season in 48 years today with a 20 to 0 rout of The Citadel and a skittering halfback named Ray Matthews engineered a personal coup.

The victory gave Clemson the Southern Conference title. Had the Tigers lost, North Carolina—with only a tie marring the record—would hae claimed the crown.

Matthews scored every touchdown to run his season's total to 78 points, shading North Carolina's Charlie Justice as Southern Conference champion.

Coach Frank Howard's push-button backfield made it certain early in the game that the Tigers would enter their Jacksonville, Fla., postseason Gator Bowl clash with Missouri toting an unblemished record which extends over two seasons to 13 straight wins.

The dazzling Clemson single wing sparked with incessant hand-offs and complicated deceptions to set up the first score. Matthews took a handoff in the second period from Fullback Fred Cone and dashed 12 yards over the goal after Dick Hendley had paced a downfield drive from midfield.

Minutes later another march gave Matthews the ball on the 6 and he ripped around right end and over behind a phalanx of blockers. He had made it on the play before, but an offside penalty nullified the effort.

Citadel Stiffens

Citadel stiffened after the half and the third period went scoreless on the strength of valiant line play by the losers. But Matthews, a slim-shanked Pennsylvanian who has had to share the spotlight all season with Bouncing Bob Gage, came up with a sparkling 60-yard run in the fourth quarter after taking a bullet toss from Gage.

Even in losing, Citadel spoiled the odds by upsetting the five-touchdown edge accorded Clemson.

Gonzaga Beaten, 26-6, By Central shortly afterward when Guard Jim Redmond blocked a Pantos punt and the ball rolled out of bounds on the Central 25. Billy Haley, and Tom O'Keefe then drove to the five, but there, Johnny Hogan fumbled and Gene Million recovered for Central.

The passing of Hogan and the hard running of Haley kept Central on its heels for the rest of the half but the Eagles couldn't quite go all the way themselves. Just before the half ended, Hogan was hurt, nad was sidelined for the rest of the game.

Purple Tallies

Gonzaga's only touchdown had an ironical twist, and came early in the third quarter. Haley's brilliant running spearheaded a 40-yard Eagle drive to Central's 10. Pantos temporarily ended the threat by intercepting a Berne Lauck pass in the end zone, and running out to the Central five.

A few days later, Pantos fumbled and the whole Gonzaga line swarmed on the ball on the goal line. It was a relatively simple thing for O'Keefe to pile over left tackle for the touchdown.

Then as the third period ebbed away, Gregory put Central ahead, and Pantos' quick-thinking extended the lead to 19-6 in the fourth quarter.

With six minutes left, Million blunted another Gonzaga drive by intercepting a Lauck pass and running 15 yards to the Gonzaga 20. Wert and Pantos carried to the two and Wert cracked over right tackle for the touchdown. Chaconas converted to wind up the scoring.

Navy Could Keep Tom Hamilton With Permanent Athletic Post

By Red Smith
Copyright, 1948, N. Y. Herald Tribune

New York, Dec. 4.—Before discussing the possibility that Capt. Tom Hamilton, director of athletics at the United States Naval Academy, may resign from the service to accept a similar post at the University of Pittsburgh, it is advisable to establish the meaning of terms. Toward that end, these definitions are borrowed from the most reliable of lexicographers, the late Ambrose Bierce:

Academy, N. An ancient school where morality and philosophy were taught.

Ambition, N. An overmastering desire to be vilified by enemies while living and made ridiculous by friends when dead.

Success, N. The one unpardonable sin against one's fellows.

Admiral, N. That part of a warship which does the talking while the figurehead does the thinking.

At last report, Tom Hamilton, figurehead, does the thinking.

At last report, Tom Hailton, who loves to wrestle with his friends, was wrestling with the devil of indecision in Annapolis and Washington, trying to make up his mind whether to give up a beloved career for the security of the Pitt job or to go on batting his brains out against the serried ranks of Navy braid.

According to Tom's friends he is ambitious to become an admiral, same as any other career Navy man, but they believe that if he could be sure of an opportunity to build a sound, long-range athletic program for the Navy he would cheerfully abandon thoughts of promotion in the service.

That job, the administration of Navy athletics, is where Tom's heart is and where he has had his greatest success. His work of creating and directing Navy's physical fitness program during the war was an immense achievement. By the way, he also fought the war. Frequent references to his administrative work may give the uninformed the impresion that he served at a desk in Washington. But when kamikaze planes hurtled out of the sky over the Enterprise, Tom was there.

It is undoubtedly because of his success with the athletic program that Pitt wants him. Pitt hopes to overcome his reluctance to quit the service he loves by offering him enough money.

(Money, N. A blessing that is of no advantage to us excepting when we part with it. An evidence of culture and a passport to polite society.—Bierce.)

Well, Pitt played nine football games this year and won six . . . Navy played nine and won none. Off those figures, an ignoramus might argue that if Pitt needs a guy like Tom Hamilton, Navy needs him more. You'd imagine that if Pitt is in such a sweat to get him, Navy would be at least as eager to keep him. But that smacks strongly of logic. Too strongly, perhaps.

(Logic, N. The art of thinking and reasoning in strict accordance with the limitations and incapacities of the human misunderstanding—Ibid.)

Why hasn't Navy done the logical thing and kept Hamilton on at Annapolis as the permanent director of athletics, answerable only to the superintendent of the academy? The answer has been made here before.

The answer is simply the braid's refusal to relinquish control of any authority. The braid does not see the post of athletic director as a long-range job of work to be entrusted to the best man available. It sees it, instead, as a small plum to be passed around to members of the lodges, but not to be eaten by any. It is regarded more as a social distinction than as a task that the right man could handle to the credit of the whole Navy.

And so it is jealously provided that no man may have the position permanently. No matter how good or how bad a job the incumbent may do, he may not remain at it for more than two or maybe four years. Hot or cold, out he goes then to make room for somebody else.

As long as this is the rule, a man in active service could not be retained indefinitely in the post. That would create jealousy among all the other four-stripers in the Navy. To keep Captain Hamilton on at Annapolis, it would be necessary to retire him to civilian status. There need be no difficulty about that, since Tom would have to resign from the Navy, anyhow, to accept Pitt's offer.

The whole country was proud of Navy after its tie with Army a week ago. The country could be prouder still if Tom had a chance at the job he could do. The whole country will have cause for regret if Hamilton decides he must go to Pitt. But if he does so decide, more power to him. The guy deserves the best.

Hamilton Expects Decision Monday

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 4 (AP).—Capt. Tom Hamilton said today he "expects a decision Monday" whether he will stay in the Navy or accept the post of athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh.

"I'm returning to Washington Monday for a final talk and there should be an announcement a day or two later," Hamilton said.

Hamilton Still on Fence

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 4 (AP).—Capt. Tom Hamilton said today he "expects a decision next Monday" whether he will stay in the Navy or accept the post of athletic director at the University of Pittsburgh.

"I'm returning to Washington Monday for a final talk and there should be an announcement a day or two later," Hamilton said.

Hamilton and Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., superintendent of the Naval Academy, conferred with Secretary of the Navy Sullivan and Admiral Louis E. Denfeld, Chief of Naval Operations.

"Navy men have been splendid in their cooperation, the same as Pitt officials, and I'm satisfied now that my life is in athletics, either at the academy or at Pitt," Hamilton said.

This statement gave weight to reports that Hamilton might be given assurance by the Navy of remaining at the academy as permanent athletic director. Under present policy, the captain probably is slated to be transferred to sea duty next year.

The normal hitch for officers at the academy is three years. Hamilton put in two years as football coach before stepping up to athletic director last June.

Hamilton visited the Pitt campus Thursday and evidently learned what the job offers.

USC Almost Beats Irish, Game Ends in Deadlock, 14-14

Southern California led, 14 to 7. But Notre Dame was not through fighting. Not Notre Dame—ever.

It was then that Gay took the kickoff and raced from the goal line down to Southern California's 13.

Quarterback Bob Williams made 5 yards on a sneak and then began passing to Gay in the end zone. The officials on the second of his heaves detected Center Gene Beck interfering with Gay and gave Notre Dame the ball on the 1-yard line. Emil Sitko went over in two plays and Steve Oracko kicked his second conversion of the day to tie the score.

The Trojans thus for the second time ended a record Notre Dame winning streak. Today's Irish 11 had gone into the game with the mark of 21 straight victories, while the 1931 Notre Dame team which was downed 16 to 14 in one of the most thrilling football games ever played, had a record of 20 straight wins. Notre Dame's last loss was to Great Lakes, 39-7, in 1945.

Disdaining the odds that made them prohibitive underdogs, the Trojans rocked the Irish back on their collective cleats all afternoon, even outlucking them.

Luck Deserts Irish

The traditional Irish luck deserted the South Bend, Ind., Ramblers when their backfield star, Frank Tripucka, was carried off the field after the last play of the first half with a kidney injury and possible factured ribs.

On that play, incidentally, the Trojans had lost the ball on downs just 1 foot from the Notre Dame goal line and the Irish held a 7 to 0 intermission lead that was destined to be liquidated.

They had gained that advantage despite four fumbles and other ineptness not generally associated with Notre Dame teams.

The Irish fumbled six times in all and those bobbles plus the injury to Tripucka cost them the victory.

The fumbles in the first half kept Notre Dame from getting a sustained drive going. Halfback Terry Brennan contributed two of the bobbles, with John Panelli and Gay also losing the ball.

Brennan's first fumble was on the runback of the opening kickoff, giving Southern California the ball on the Notre Dame 24. But the massive Irish line kept Southern California from capitalizing on the break.

Desperation tackles by the secondary kept the Irish from crossing the midfield stripe in the first period.

But on the third play of the second period, Tripucka passed 10 yards to End Leon Hart, and the All-America star raced 35 yards to a touchdown. At least six men tried to bring Hart down as he twisted and turned on his way to the goal line.

Gay's fumble late in the second period was responsible for Southern California moving to within a foot of a score. USC captured the fumble on the Irish 33.

The passing combination of Quarterback Dill to Halfback Kirby began clicking and two aerials took the ball to the 8. There, Dill passed on fourth down to Art Battle on the 1-yard line, and he dived forward but ran into a pair of Notre Dame linemen and was halted a foot from the goal.

After halting the Trojans, Tripucka, with less than a minute to play, stuck entirely to quarterback sneaks to hold the ball until the period ended. It was on the third of these sneaks that he was struck hard and suffered the injuries that kept him from playing in the second half.

Despite the tie, Notre Dame maintained its record of not being defeated in 28 straight games. Southern California, by its play today, joined the great Army team of Glenn Davis and Doc Blanchard as the only other team to hold the Irish to a tie during the 28 games.

The Irish had a wide margin of superiority in their running attack, making 230 yards to Southern California's 74. But in passing the Trojans made 130 to 74 for Notre Dame.

Sitko was held to 3.66 yards per play by Southern California, while the Trojans' Jack Kirby had an avreage of 4.5 yards per play to lead his team. Gay led the Irish running attack with 10.42 yards per play in seven trips.

will bank on old reliable, Slingin' Sammy Baugh. He's hurled 240 of Washington's 285 aerials, completing 139 for 2037 yards and 17 touchdowns.

Los Angeles' running attack is led by Fullback Dick Hoerner of Iowa with 316 yards in 68 trips with the ball. Kenny Washington, great Negro back from UCLA, will see much service on his record of 220 yards in 43 trips.

Washington can depend on two pass receivers who have scored more touchdowns than the Rams' Tom Fears, league leader in the catching department. Hal Crisler has scored six times and Dick Todd four times, each snagging 31 passes. While hanging up his three touchdowns, however, Fears has caught 47 passes and covered 612 yards.

Today's game, the first between the clubs since the Rams took a sub-zero 15-14 verdict in the '45 championship game in Cleveland, is the sixth regular season meeting in 11 years. Washington won the first five.

Pedersen-Bruneau Duo Wins As 6-Day Race Flops to an End

Arne Pedersen and Emil Bruneau, the improvised Danish-Belgian pair, won the International Six Day Bike Race at the National Guard Armory and rigor mortis promptly set in on the sport in Washington.

The bespectacled Copenhagen lawyer and hollow-cheeked Belgian stole a lap at 9:45, then held off a last desperate bid during the last hour by the Dutch team of Ben Remkes and Christian van Gent.

The extra lap that the winners had on the field nullified all sprint point totals which would have decided the winner otherwise.

Bike racing's death rattle here was somewhat more interesting last night than the quiet pall surrounding it all week. Some 400 people turned out to watch the finish and they were rewarded by a sizzling show for the last two hours.

There very nearly wasn't any finish. A marshal had shown up early yesterday afternoon armed with a writ of attachment in favor of a publicity photographer who hadn't been paid off and carried off the proceeds.

The riders, who had been promised all the money taken in insisted on having Harvey Black, assistant referee, stationed at the box office to pick up the swag. Black took up his stand and the race went on.

As it was, it was a slim week for the worn peddlers. They earned roughly $100 apiece for the 113 hours of cycling they put in this week. Originally their contracts called for $65 per day.

IT'S TROJANS' BALL—Notre Dame had a bad case of fumbles, bobbling seven times in yesterday's game with Southern California. USC recovered six times. One of the Irish fumbles occurred on the opening kickoff. Tackle Charlie Peterson of USC dives on the ball, dropped by Halfback Terry Brennan on Notre Dame's 24-yard line, but the Trojans were unable to capitalize on it. No. 80 for Notre Dame is Tackle Gus Cifelli. The game ended in a 14-14 tie.

Durham Awards

Blockers at Last Receive Recognition

Durham, N. C., Dec. 4 (AP).—Three outstanding blocking backs will be honored at a Monday meeting of the Durham Quarterback Club.

The William P. Jacobs Memorial Trophy will be awarded to the following:

Bob Bowlby, North Carolina State, as the best Southern Conference blocker.

Truitt Smith, Mississippi State, as the best in the Southeastern Conference.

Bob Martin, Clemson, voted the best in the State of South Carolina.

Announcement of the winners was made by William P. Jacobs, jr., of Clinton, S. C., son of the man who instituted the awards several years ago. Dr. Jacobs, prominent in textile and publishing circles, died several months ago.

Bowly's selection was announced today. The 6-foot, 170-pounder from Patterson, N. J., will captain the 1949 State team. He was hurt in midseason and missed several games thereafter, but his work up to that point won him the nomination over Maryland's Harry Bonk in a close race.

Back of them were two Clemson players—Martin and Guard Frank Gillespie.

Martin, a 175-pound senior from Fort Mill, S. C., was given the nod over Gillespie in the South Carolina contest.

Smith, whose Mississippi State team lost to Clemson as did North Carolina State, just nosed out Tennessee's Jack Armstrong in a vote of the head coaches of the Southeastern Conference. He hails from Hazlehurst, Miss., is a 196-pound junior.

In addition to the blockers, Frank Howard, coach of Clemson, will be honored as the No. 1 mentor of the Southern Conference. Members of the Southern Conference Sports Writers Assocation recently voted him that honor.

Wynkoop Horse Posts 1:32.6 Time

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., Dec. 4.—One Only, 9-year-old son of Only One and Super Dun, tossed mud at six rivals all the way today to win the Howard Purse, featuring the first weekend program here in the Shenandoah Valley.

Racing in the colors of J. K. Wynkoop of Hagerstown, Md., and having Jockey George Cardoza in the saddle, One Only finished 10 lengths ahead of his closest opposition.

A disappointment in an earlier-week outing here when he was carried to the outside fence, One Only ran straight and true today and was second choice in the betting, paying a $7.40 mutuel.

Favored White Easter Second

E. L. Poston's White Easter was the favorite and finished in second position, three lengths in advance of H. G. Bedwell's French Lure.

The track remained heavy, but the weather overhead was ideal. A crowd of 7000 bet more than $250,000 on the program and saw One Only tour the approximately 7-furlong course in 1:32 3/5, only 10 seconds over the track record.

There was little to the race. One Only slipped into the lead almost as soon as Starter Harold Holland pressed the button. From that point to the wire all at stake was second and third money. Silver Rose was prominent early. White Easter then moved up to hold French Lure safe for the place.

Country Dude Wins

One Only is one of the biggest money winners to show here. The ancient gelding turned in his tenth victory today in 27 tries for the season. The $850 he took down brought his 1948 earnings to $17,100.

In the day's secondary feature, the Young Purse, Mrs. H. S. Grinder's Country Dude, smartly handled by Apprentice Willie Downs, proved the first repeater of the meeting. The 7-year-old led J. N. Fishback's Sister Leona and J. J. Nash's Slower to the wire. Backers of Country Dude collected an $8.60 mutuel.

The daily double on the 4-and-5 combination paid $74.80. Flying Moose, owned by Norman Corbin of Washington, won the first race at $19.40 while Dr. J. W. Etheridge's Grey Prince accounted for the second at $6.40.

Terps Make Home Debut On Thursday

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

George Washington opens its Southern Conference basketball schedule tomorrow night at Raleigh, N. C., and there's reason to suspect the schedule-makers are making it lead with its chin.

The Colonials have to oppose North Carolina State, undefeated in 12 conference tests last season and seeking its third straight conference crown. State has lost only one veteran, the Caps' Leo Katkaveck.

Nine returnees include All-America forward Dick Dickey who scored 451 points to help the Wolfpack average 75.6 points per game, the country's second strongest offense.

This season, Hanes Hosiery, of Winston-Salem, turned back State, 49-38, but in a return match lost, 53-47.

Colonials Won Opener

With Coach Art Zahn still hospitalized with a long illness, George Garbel will try to coach GW to an upset. The Colonials werese second in the conference last year and have enough veterans to give N. C. State an argument.

In its opener, GW rushed to a 52-22 halftime lead over a good Quantico Marine team and breezed home, 77-51. The improved Ray Adler, high-scoring Bill Cantwell, Phil McNiff, Maynard Haithcock, Chet Pietras, Art Cerra, Len Small and Johnny Moffatt are the lettermen counted upon to lead GW to a successful campaign.

The Colonials return here for Southern Conference games at the Armory with VPI on Wednesday and Richmond on Saturday.

Elmer Ripley's Georgetown team opens Tuesday, December 7, and Rip's hoping the symbolic date won't mean another diststrous season. Highly-touted last year, the Hoyas lived up to advance notices in their first six games and then went into a tailspin, losing six in a rugged 7000-mile trip against top opposition.

Hoyas Meet Fort Belvoir

Georgetown wound up with 13 wins against 15 losses.

The Hoyas play Fort Belvoir at Catholic U. gym Tuesday night then swing into Madison Square Garden to face strong NYU on Saturday night. Heavily-favored Baylor received a sound 67-47 trouncing at the hands of NYU in its opener.

Captain Ray Corley, Tommy O'Keefe, Joe Culhane, Dick Falvey, Frank Alagia and Johnny Brown head the list of nine lettermen back. They're joined by three sophomore who helped the Hoya Frosh compile a 17-1 record last season.

Two of them will give Georgetown much-needed height—John Mazziotta, 6 feet five, and Dan Supkis, 6 feet eight. John Kelly, who with Mazziotta was an All-Metropolitan choice New York high school teams, is 6 feet three.

On Friday, Geaorgetown waged an even scrimmage with Navy and may have the stuff to have the season this year it thought it was going to have last year.

American Plays Virginia

American U., in keeping with what seems to be a local policy of starting out with formidable foes, plays Virginia at Charlottesville Wednesday night and meets its second Mason-Dixon Conference foe Thursday at Randolph-Macon.

Staff Cassell's Eagles already have beaten the alumni, Towson and Connecticut and dropped one to St. Francis of Brooklyn. They meet Penn State here December 14.

Maryland started out with powerful Temple last night and makes what should be an easier home debut Thursday with VPI. Saturday, Flucie Stewart's Terps will go to Baltimore to engage Loyola.

Catholic University has a three-game slate this week, meeting Wilson Teachers Wednesday and Lynchburg Friday. On Saturday, Abe Rosenfield's charges play at Roanoke.

Savold and Woodcock Finish Workouts for Bout Monday

By Bill Macklin

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—Lee Savold, veteran Paterson, N. J., fighter and British Empire Heavyweight Champion Bruce Woodcock finished training today for their important 10-round clash here Monday night.

Both fighters were equally confident of victory and bookmakers rated the bout as even affair.

"My boy's greater experience will win," said Bill Daly, Savold's manager.

"I'm more confident than ever—you'll see a new Woodcock Monday," said Tom Hurst, the pilot of the British champion.

Both fighters broke up their training camps. Woodcock drilled up north in his hometown Doncaster while Savold did his training at Eastbourne on the English Channel coast.

They will travel to London tomorrow. The bout will be held in Harringay Arena at 5 p. m. (EST) before a capacity crowd of 10,700 fans. Woodcock will weigh about 191 and Savold 190.

The 32-year-old Savold, who has scored three straight knockouts in his current comeback, will get about 25 per cent of the estimated $104,000 gate. Woodcock is expected to draw the same, although Promoter Jack Solomons refused to disclose the maount of the purses.

Several million Britons will listen to the BBC broadcast of the fight in the hopes that their champion will show enough to warrant a shot at World Titleholder Joe Louis.

Louis has said he will defend his title against Savold or the winner of the Ezzard Charles-Joe Baksi fight in New York's Madison Square Garden, December 10. Woodcock, of course, will figure prominently in the picture in the event he scores over Savold. From those four contenders will come Louis' next opponent, it was understood.

Although the fight was a "pick 'em" affair, there has been very little wagering on the outcome thus far.

Radiomen Play Bakers In Soccer

By Sy Fishbein
Post Reporter

The Washington and Suburban Soccer League enters its seventh week of play today with five league games and one exhibition scheduled.

In a contest which could clinch first half honors for it, unbeaten Sugar Radio meets second place Martin's Bakery at Rosedale Playground. Sugar Radio has won six and is solidly entrenched in first place. In another District encounter, the Italian O. S. I. A. team will oppose the Pan-Americoan booters at 24th and Constitution ave.

The Suburban portion of the league finds Marlboro and Maryland Sports Club at 6300 Walker Mill rd., Rockville and Charles County at Waldorf, and Glasva at Indianhead. The Washington French Club will travel to Elkton, Md. for an exhibition game.

St. Dominic's Loses

St. Francis Xavier bounced St. Dominic's from the unbeaten ranks of the Girls' Junior CYO Basketball League yesterday, 19-12. The only undefeated team left in the division, St. Peter's, won its fourth straight, 26-6, over St. Joseph's. St. Michael's defeated St. Cecilia's, 37-5, and St. Thomas downed St. Teresa's, 13-9. All four games were played at St. Patrick's gym.

'Bowls' Postponed

A muddy Ellipse made it necessary to postpone the Big and Little Potato Bowls scheduled there yesterday. The two games, which will decide the 90 and 105-pound city Boys Club championships, will be played today.

Cat Bridge, at 7-1, Romps Home in Tropical Feature

Miami, Fla., Dec. 4 (AP).—G. R. Watkins' Cat Bridge, a seven to one shot, today won the $7,500 added E. R. Bradley Memorial Handicap by a length before 9,612 surprised racing fans.

Ridden by Veteran Jockey Mike Basile, Cat Bridge edged the heavily favored Bug Juice in the mile and sixteenth feature event.

Bug Juice, from the Bermill Farm Stables, was second and Woolford Farm's approval was third in the field of six.

Cat Bridge, although a frequent winner in Maryland Racing this summer, was neglected in the betting and paid $16, $4.60 and $3.80 across the board for a $2 wager.

The winner, racing for Sheriff G. R. Watkins of Delaware County, Pa., earned $5,775 first money.

In the early running, Cat Bridge ran a steady fourth. He began moving forward on the outside coming to the half mile pole and took the lead approaching the quarter pole. Basile commanded a two-length lead entering the stretch until Bug Juice cut it down to a length near the finish.

Thus far, Tropical Park has fallen below last year's attendance and handle. Gulfstream Park, which opened the 1947-48 season, totaled 43,777 patrons and $2,050,286 at the end of four days racing. This year Tropical has totaled 32,527 paid admissions and $1,428,390 in mutuel play.

The daily average last year for the first four days was 10,966 customers and $512,,71 in wagers. Thus far this season the average is 8132 persons and $357,047 in handle.

The attendance is down 11,252 and wagering down $621,896 from last year at this time.

MIT Sailors Take Lead in Frostbite Regatta

Terps, GW, Hoya Trail Far Behind

Massachusetts Institute of Technology took full advantage of pleasant breezes and inappropriate summery sunshine yesterday to take a first-day lead in the annual Frostbite Regatta on the Potomac River.

The MITs notched 57 points to lead Boston College and Yale, their closest contenders, by 13 points each.

Maryland, Georgetown and George Washington, the unhappy hosts, were far behind with 40, 39 and 32, while Princeton was last with 22. Harvard and Cornell canceled their entries because of transportation difficulties.

The last 6 of the 14 races will begin at 9 a. m. today. George Washington, the defending champion, is furnishing all the schools with the Tempest dinghies.

Each school entered two crews, which competed in separate divisions. Each crew received a point for starting, a point for finishing, and a point for each other crew it defeated.

Skippers Frank Blatt and Danny Greenbaum paced the MIT crews with 30 and 27 points to lead in the A and B divisions. The two highest scoring skippers from Washington were Chet Peet, whose Georgetown crew was second in the A division, and Jack Martin, whose Maryland crew took third in the B. Both Peet and Martin scored 25 points.

Jeanne Rhodes, 19, a resident George Washington student, was chosen Queen of the Frostbite Regatta and she was crowned at the Frostbite Ball last night at Bethesda Country Club.

Thirty-three rounds of boxing have been lined up for the next D. C. National Guard amateur boxing show Friday, December 10.

A CAP GETS IT—Matt Zunic, former George Washington University player, picks up a loose ball in last night's game with the Baltimore Bullets at Uline Arena. Connie Simmons (11) of Baltimore, stands over Zunic with Kleggie Hermsen (11) of Caps, at the right. The Caps won, 83-82 widen the gap by three points, but Lewis got two of them back to make it 81-80.

There were 62 seconds left and the Caps tried to freeze their way to victory, but the Bullets wouldn't let them do it. Four times they purposely fouled and the Caps missed two of the three charity tosses. Sonny Hertzberg made his, the eighty-second point of the evening, and Feerick followed with the eighty-third tally.

The Bullets were not through yet. Walt Budko, All-America at Columbia last year, found the range and it was 83-82 with about five seconds to go. Lewis then intercepted a pass and made his effort from the side court.

Knicks Hang On To Beat Jets, 66-63

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The New York Knickerbockers blew a 14-point lead but bounced back to defeat the Indianapolis Jets, 66-63 today in a Basketball Association of America game before a father-son crowd of 7,683 at Madison Square Garden.

Leading 42-28 after three minutes of the third quarter, the Knicks appeared headed for an easy triumph but the Jets, led by player-coach Bruce Hal and Ray Lumpp, finally pulled abreast midway in the final stanza at 56-56.

A pair of free throws by Charlie Black put the Jets ahead for the first time in the game, but a three-pointer by John Palmer and two long set shots by Carl Braun regained the lead for the New Yorkers a minute before the end.

Harmony Reigns at AAU Meeting

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The 60th national convention of the Amateur Athletic Union moved toward a harmonious climax today when the AAU agreed to an armistice with the Amateur Hockey Association over the bitter dispute that almost wrecked the last Winter Olympics.

All of today's convention business was overshadowed by the surprise announcement of a compromise in the hockey situation.

Under the agreement, a joint committee will draw up a new constitution acceptable to both sides which will serve as the governing instrument for amateur hockey in this country, beginning next season.

The AHA will drop its name and both sides will relinquish what control they have exercised over the sport in the past, thus pooling their interests in working toward a common goal.

Both sides agreed that the move marked the end of the dispute which last winter resulted in both sending teams to the St. Moritz games. The AHA team finally participated, while the AAU team stayed on the sidelines, but hockey was played without official approval.

Among the American track and field records approved were 58 feet, 3/8 inch by Charles Fonville of Michigan in the shot put at the Kansas Relays last April 17; 13.6 seconds for the 120 yard high hurdles by Harrison Dillard of Baldwin Wallace at the same meet; 45.9 seconds for 400 meters by Jamaican Herb McKenley at the National AAU meet in Milwaukee, Wis., last July 2, and McKenley's 46 seconds for 440 yards at Berkeley, Calif., last June 5.

All four better existing world records, In fact, McKenley's 45.9 second performance already has been accepted as a world mark.

The records committee failed to recommend approval of the 9.3 seconds for 100 yards by Mel Patton of Southern California at Fresno, Calif., last May 15, on the ground it needed more information. Patton already is recognized as co-holder of the present American and world record of 9.4 seconds.

Among several indoor records approved was the 4:05.3 for the mile run turned in by Gil Dodds of the Boston AA at Madison Square Garden, January 31, 1948.

New York Athletic Commission Chairman Eddie Eagan was the principal speaker at the luncheon meeting. He referred briefly to his own Olympic boxing competition and to his appearances as a spectator at the 1948 Olympics, noting that Russia was not represented in London.

"When I visited Russia in 1934, I found then that the people were really keen about sports," he said. "But when sport is controlled by the government, it has the kiss of death on it.

"If we could bring Russia into some kind of athletic competition—play their games if they can't play ours—we would go a long way toward promoting international understanding."

Robinson Boxes Belloise Thursday

Jersey City, N. J., Dec. 4 (AP).—Ray (Sugar) Robinson, who still is in the process of deciding what to do with his welterweight title, takes on Steve Belloise in an over-the-weight match at the Armory Thursday.

The Tournament of Champions is putting on the 10-round scrap.

Catholic U. Wins 2d in Row, 56-31

Catholic University scored its second straight basketball victory last night, 56-31, over Marine Headquarters at the C.U. gym.

The Cardinals were off to a 36-22 halftime lead and retained a comfortable margin with their reserves in the second half.

Jack Walsh, Gene Szklarz and Jim Lofty led the C.U. scoring parade with 14, 13 and 12 points.

Conference Holds Annual Session Here

The Southern Conference holds its annual meeting in Washington for the first time this week and the biggest bit of business is expected to be the naming of a new president.

Col. William Couper, of Virginia Military Institute, already has expressed his willingness to step down and Maryland's Dean Gearey Eppley, now vice president, probably will succeed him. The conference is the sports governing body for 16 schools.

Col. William Couper, who announced the ruling that Maryland's Lu Gambino was ineligible before the season opened, was elected in 1946 and reelected this year. In mid-November, he said he thought it was time for "younger men to take over." He also reminded that he started his collegiate football career in Washington when he played for VMI against Georgetown and figured it a good place to bow out.

Eppley and Max Farrington, athletic director at GW, will take important parts in the meeting to be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday with headquarters at the Mayflower Hotel. Their schools are cohosts for the affair.

Routine business will be taken care of all three days and the annual banquet of the conference will be held Friday at 6:30 p. m.

Rodney Honored As Best Harness Horse of 1948

Chicago, Dec. 4 (AP).—Rodney, speedy giant-striding bay stallion owned by the R. Horace Johnson Stable of Charlotte, N. C., today was named "harness horse of 1948" in a vote of 181 sports editors, radio experts and turf writers.

Rodney, 4-year-old son of Spencer Scott-Earl's Princess Martha, did not lose a race all year. He set a world's record for the mile and a quarter of 2:31 3/5 and raced the fastest mile of the year in harness, 1:58.

Third place went to Knight Dream, 3-year-old pacer and winner of the 1948 Little Brown Jug. Knight Dream is owned by the Gray Armstrong Stable, Providence, R. I.

For Want of Lead A Race Is 'Lost' By Five Horses

Wetherby, England, Dec. 4 (AP).—Lack of weight "beat" five runners in the Thorparch novices hurdle race today.

There weren't enough lead saddle weights—used to bring the horses up to the handicappers' assignment for them—to go around and they had to be scratched.

Twenty-eight runners went to the post.

Stonewall, West Fight

A "regular barroom brawl" was the forecast for Wednesday night's boxing feature at Uline Arena, where local lightweights Sonny Boy West and Stonewall Jackson tangle in a rubber match.

Bill Edwards, Jackson's manager, said he would send his fighter out to "throw every punch he knows. This time Stonewall will use his own style. There won't be any handcuffs on him and West is in for a rough evening."

Erwards referred to the last clash of the D. C. hopefuls, in which West knocked out Jackson in the eighth round. Edwards claims Jackson was fouled out as he attempted to change his rough-tough style for a more orthodox method. In the first meeting of the pair Jackson took a decision in Baltimore.

Jackson has been training for the last week with Bee Bee Washington, former outstanding middleweight.

Another Benefit Grid Game Set For Ed Tawney

Eddie Tawney, popular triple-threat back on the Southwest Merchants sandlot football team, will be the beneficiary of receipts of a game next Sunday afternoon at Griffith Stadium.

Southwest and Brookland-Woodridge are the two contesting teams, and the fans who pay to look on will be helping to defray hospital expenses of the injured 160-pound star.

In a Metropolitan Amateur Football League game early in the season Tawney suffered a fractured back and had to miss work for four weeks. Until his injury he had scored all five of his team's touchdowns.

Missouri Group Alters Pro Rule

Kansas City, Dec. 4 (AP). — Beginning September 1, 1949, professional baseball players will no longer be alowed to participate in baseball and football games n the Missouri Intercolegiate Athletic Association (MIAA).

The change was voted today at the annual meeting of MIAA officials and coaches. The new ruling, which conforms with the National Collegiate Athletic Association rule, will abolish a 12-year-old MIAA law that permitted professional baseball players to be members of MIAA cage and grid squads.

Bosox Schedule 28 Spring Games

Boston, Dec. 4 (AP).—Boston's Red Sox, who lost the American League pennant last season in an unprecedented playoff with the Cleveland Indians, will play a cord of 28 preseason exhibition games, general manager Joe Cronin announced tonight.

Bowling Green And CCNY Win in Garden

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Bowling Green equalled an all-time team scoring record at Madison Square Garden tonight, rolling up a 97-64 victory over Long Island University in the second game of a college basketball doubleheader. The 97 points was a new regular season scoring mark, and tied the tournament mark set by DePaul in 1945.

Giving a beautiful exhibition of able ball handling and fancy shot-making, City College's eager Beavers turned in an impressive 70-57 victory over Brigham Young in the opening game.

A sellout crowd of 18,000 saw the Beavers ring up their seventeenth straight triumph, including all three starts this season.

Lynn Chewning Says 5 Pro Clubs Extend 'Feelers'

Richmond, Va., Dec. 4 (AP).—Lynn Chewning, Little All-America halfback from Hampden-Sydney College, said today he had received "feelers" from eight professional football clubs.

Chewning said he had received letters, telephone calls or visits from the Washington Redskins, the Philadelphia Eagles, Detroit Lions, Boston Yanks, New York Giants, the Los Angeles Rams, the San Francisco '49ers and the Cleveland Browns.

Hampden-Sydney Head Coach Morgan Tiller will do the contract negotiating for Chewning when he learns which two rival teams have secured draft rights on the backfield star.

Howard Captures Opener, 79-37

New Harness Group Forms

Organization of the second half-mile harness racing plant in Maryland, this one to be called the Rosecroft Trotting and Pacing Association at Oxon Hill, Md., was announced yesterday by its president, William E. Miller, local furniture man.

Miller said he had appointed Richard W. Case, a veteran of 12 years in the harness sport, as general manager. Application has been made to the Maryland Racing Commission and the United States Trotting Association for '49 spring meeting dates Miller hopes will extend over 20 nights.

The new raceway is located just seven miles from Washington on Brinkley road, on a part of Miller's large Maryland esatte. Ten modern stables have been constructed; grading of the track is under way and a four-lane highway is being built to the track's entrance.

Washington Boy Passes To Score in Navy Win

Hamilton, Bermuda, Dec. 4 (AP). The Jacksonville (Fla) Naval Air Station football eleven defeated the Kindley Skyliners, 26-6, today.

The Tars scored in every period except the third. R. W. Tisdale of Ashland, Ky., snared a 35-yard pass from C. M. Anderson of Washington, D. C., for the first Jacksonville touchdown in the first period.

Heavies Bid for Louis Date In Four Shows This Week

New York, Dec. 4 (AP). — Joe Louis' opponent for a June defense of his heavyweight title may pop up in a series of heavyweight bouts to be staged in the next six days.

Dormant since Louis stiffened Jersey Joe Walcott and announced his "retirement," the heavies elbow into the picture with a big show at London Monday, a "name" scrap at Cleveland Tuesday and two major programs Friday.

Lee Savold, believed by many to have the inside track on the Louis shot, goes Monday in London against Bruce Woodcock, the British champ. Although Lee, the former barkeeper from Paterson, N. J., is the underdog in England, many on this side of the pond expect him to score a knockout victory.

Joe Baksi gets another chance at the big cash in a 15-rounder with Ezzard Charles at Madison Square Garden Friday.

While Charles and Baksi are fighting in New York, Louis will be busy on the most important date of his long exhibition tour. The bomber meets Billy Conn in an exhibition at Chicago Friday night, their third meeting. The first two, of course, were for keeps and both ended with Conn on the floor.

Conn hardly figures in the scheme of things as a Louis foe in June as he is just starting a comeback, but things happen fast in the boxing business.

Cleveland's Tuesday pairing of Jimmy Bivins and Joey Maxim also carries a great deal of importance. A sensational victory for either boy in the 10-rounder on the Cleveland News' Christmas Show would move him into a good spot.

Rowing Coaches Declare War On U. S. Olympic Committee

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—The Rowing Coaches Organization of America has declared war on the American Olympic rowing committee.

In a sharply worded resolution adopted at the group's annual meeting here yesterday, the coaches demanded the American Olympic committee replace the seven members who sat on the rowing committee for the 1948 games.

They charged that the seven "acted in direct opposition to the unanimous recommendation of the American rowing colleges in the selection of the Schuylkill River" as site for the 1948 American Olympic trials, and "in so doing were not acting in the best interests of American rowing . . ."

Coaches said they felt the colleges do not have the proper representation or voice on the Olympic rowing committee and that the rowing clubs are in control. One said that considering the fact the colleges have furnished the championship olympic eight ever since 1920 it was considered a travesty for the clubs to wield such dominant authority.

The Schuylkill, in Philadelphia, was opposed by the coaches because of its deposits of mud, but despite coaches protests the committee named it as the site. Just before the June trials it was decided to switch the events to Princeton, N. J., where better conditions prevaile.d

The seven committee members nominated for the plank-walking in the resolution were C. L. Brett, J. J. Carlin, Latrobe Cogswell, K. N. Heinz, J. B. Kelly, sr., T. E. Lane and T. J. Van Twisk.

Spurned Folsom Switched Stand, Electors Assert

Alabama's 11 presidential electors told the Supreme Court yesterday it would be "unheard of" to require them to vote for a man "denounced" as President Truman was by Gov. James E. Folsom.

The electors are pledged to vote for Gov. Strom Thurmond, the States' Rights candidate. Folsom is seeking an injunction barring them from voting for anyone but Mr. Truman.

"The electors, answering a separate suit brought by three Alabama voters seeking similar action, said:

"It was only after Folsom was not selected by the Democrats of Alabama as their standard-bearer and was not elected a delegate-at-large to the national convention that he pretended to be interested in the political fortunes of Harry S. Truman."

The electors said "the people of Alabama had a perfect right to rely on the statement of their Governor to the effect that Truman was incompetent and unworthy to be President."

Langer Again to Seek Voting System Change

Senator Langer (R., N. D.) has been trying for eight years to get the Congress to pass his bill providing for election of the President and Vice President by popular vote.

He said today he'll try again in the next Congress. His proposal would supplant the electoral college system.

Tragedies Rob Woman of Home, Spouse, 2 Children

Dayton, Ohio, Dec. 4 (U.P.).—The fourth tragedy in a series which resulted in the loss of her home, husband and two children in less than a year was suffered today by Mrs. Lovena Abbott.

Mrs. Abbott's three-month-old daughter, Sheila Mae, accidentally suffocated early this morning in her crib, coroner's investigator Earl Frederick reported.

A year ago a fire destroyed the Abbott home here.

The husband, Kenneth Abbott, a former Dayton policeman, shot and killed himself in a rooming house at Springfield, Ohio, on May 28. And three months ago her 21-month-old son, Kenneth James, was run down and killed by an automobile near their home.

MEN—Are you finding it hard to meet your obligations on your present salary? Are today's inflated prices slowly eating into your savings? Do you and your wife both work, or are you working two jobs in order to pay the bills? How much longer can you hold out? Already you are reading ads, hoping to find a higher paying job. Well, how can you know what lies behind an ad after you read it? Could you get along with the fellow who wrote it; or would you be happy and successful while working with his company under his direction? You don't know, and you never will know unless you investigate. Since you are looking for a new job, carefully consider the following ad: YOUNG MAN or older man, if your mind and body are still ACTIVE: One of America's largest corporations will employ you and train you to operate under a contract of unusual proportions if you have good intentions and a good reputation. If you desire or intend to eventually have an income of from $6000 to $12,000 per year, you will recognize this as an unusual business opportunity—with the road wide open and alluring. The necessary training period will be surprisingly short, and entirely without cost to you. Apply in person at 7:30 sharp Wednesday evening.

Season's First White-Tie Event

Forrestals Entertain With Brilliant Fete At Anderson House

By Marie McNair

A PARTY that 700 Washingtonians will remember: The reception last night given by the Secretary of Defense and Mrs. James Forrestal at Anderson House, Graustarkian Palace set down in the heart of town.

War dimmed the lights at Anderson House, where the King and Queen of Siam, Marshal Foch and other distinguished visitors once were guests. The Navy moved in for the duration at the Florentine mansion inherited by the Society of the Cincinnati upon the death of Larz Anderson, millionaire diplomat, patriot and world traveler.

Last night lights blazed in the Anderson house for the first white tie fete of the year. There was so much to see; so much not to be missed! Lovely ladies rustled silks and satins through marble halls and tapestry hung rooms. The scarlet jacketed Marine Band Orchestra played from a balcony.

Priceless jade trees decorate a drawing room upstairs. There's a whole room of Japanese art acquired when Mr. Anderson was Ambassador to Japan. There are Chinese weapons and ancient guns; carved teak, and Greek and Roman statuary. Krisses from Malay, bolos from Moro, Russian ikons, gold and silver, bronze and brass. And portraits by such artists as Sir Joshua Reynolds, Thomas Lawrence, Henry Raeburn and John Crome.

All this and bemedaled Ambassadors, the Army and Navy and the Air Force; Supreme Court dignitaries and the Cabinet, too!

And—the hostess herself, in a gown of old ivory silk, and wearing her famous necklace, earrings and bracelet of diamonds in rose design.

Dinner Parties Fete Officials, Diplomats

BEFORE THE 10 o'clock fete got under way, Secretary and Mrs. Forrestal entertained at dinner at Anderson House, the group including less than 30 top figures from officialdom. Among them were Gen. Omar Bradley, Army Chief of Staff, and Mrs. Bradley; Secretary of the Interior and Mrs. Julius Krug, Secretary of Agriculture and Mrs. Charles Brannan, Secretary of the Army and Mrs. Kenneth Royall, Senator and Mrs. Millard Tydings, the Commandant of the Marine Corps and Mrs. Clifton Cates, Senator-elect Clinton Anderson and Mrs. Anderson, Senator-elect Margaret Chase Smith, Undersecretary of the Navy and Mrs. W. John Kenney, and Mrs. Tom Clark, wife of the Attorney General. Mr. Clark joined his wife for the reception after a bar association meeting.

John Nicholas Brown, Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Air, and Mrs. Brown, gave a dinner beforehand with the French Ambassador and Mme. Bonnet the ranking guests.

Also in the company were the Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Robert Lovett, the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. Mark Andrews, Gen. and Mrs. Wade Haislip, Mr. and Mrs. Walton Butterworth, the Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. Arthur Gardner, Mrs. Truxtun Beale and Chauncey Stillman.

Army, Navy Airmen There

ARMY, NAVY and Air Attaches of foreign lands came to the reception with their wives, and their Ambassadors and their wives. There were members of Congress and a generous representation from resident Washington, personal friends of the Forrestals.

Among those were Senator George Aiken, Mrs. Richard Wigglesworth, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Clifford, Mr. and Mrs. Eric Johnston, Mr. and Mrs. Hugh D. Auchincloss, Mr. and Mrs. Tinsley Garnett, Harold Hinton, assistant to Secretary Forrestal, and Mrs. Hinton; Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dewey, the James Vardamans, Mrs. Dwight Davis.

Also the Budget Director, James Webb, and Mrs. Webb; Percy Blair, curator of Anderson House; Mr. and Mrs. John L. Newbold, Miss Irene Boyle, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. Eugene Meyer, Mr. and Mrs. Jouett Shouse, Arthur Christie, Mr. and Mrs. Curtis Munson, former Minister and Mrs. Frederick Sterling, Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Morgan, Joseph Alsop, William D. Hassett, Mr. and Mrs. Charles C. Glover, Mr. and Mrs. Brackley Shaw and Mrs. W. W. Smith.

Offered for Official Entertaining

THE LARZ ANDERSON house represents a way of life of half a century ago. The Society of the Cincinnati, oldest of patriotic organizations, is charged with the responsibility of maintaining that tradition.

The society, founded by George Washington, and named for Cincinnatus, the great Roman general, also feels that its duty is to serve the United States in any possible way. In a resolution, passed by the association, it put the building and museum at the disposal of high officials of the United States Government for official entertaining. It is available to the President, the Vice President and members of the Cabinet; also members of the Supreme Court and the Speaker of the House. But few of these have taken advantage of the society's hospitality.

Parties Crowd the Calendar

IN LAST NIGHT'S crowded hours there was a dance at the 1925 F Street Club given by Assistant Secretary of State and Mrs. Charles Saltzman, the Assistant Secretary of the Army and Mrs.

Large or Small, Tree's the Thing

WHETHER it be an artificial table size model sprayed in snowball white, Santa Claus red or Christmas Eve blue, or a roof-high spruce fresh from the Maryland countryside, the Christmas tree will be the most important member of the family for several weeks now. And choosing the proper tree and decorations deserves as much attention as picking out your holiday dinner dress

SHOWN above, Mrs. Thor Thors, wife of the Icelandic Minister, and her daughter, Margret, are doing their Christmas tree shopping early and they have a wonderful selection. Margret's eye is caught by a dainty angel whose star-studded skirt is designed so she can perch right on the top of the tree

PARTICULAR care should be used, too, in selecting Yuletide season records to spin away background music for your holiday "at home" parties. Strains of the ageless "Away in the Manger" and "We Three Kings" combine perfectly with eggnog and fruitcake. Christmas records make grand gifts, too, for your friends of all ages

Waggish Democrats Term Big Inaugural Grandstand 'Brooks Memorial Stadium'

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

MAYBE you haven't noticed the super de luxe grandstand recently erected in front of the Capitol. Wisecracking Democrats have dubbed it "The 'Curly' Brooks Memorial Stadium." Money for this grandiose structure—some $100,000—was appropriated by the Republican Eightieth Congress in happy anticipation of what they planned to be "the biggest damn inaugural in modern times." It's nicknamed in political memoriam of the Illinois Republican Senator, active in such fund alloting, who bit the dust before Democrat Candidate Paul Douglas. Meanwhile, the big inaugural is rocketing off with a jetty whoosh. The once-placid Tariff Building is beehived with inaugural offices, the once dozy switchboards so agitated that even Miss Walters, the superintendent, is subbing as a telephone girl. Melvin Hildreth and Mrs. Ernest Lindley, the biggest shots, are telephoning like mad, seeing hordes of people, arranging meetings, talking on newsreels, giving interviews, being deluged with blizzards of mail. The present estimate—not by any means a poll—is that some 750,000 tourists will hit Washington for the four-day celebration. The number, however, is steadily rising.

Schedule of Festivities

THE FESTIVITIES are scheduled as follows: January 19, the Gala Concert; the Inaugural and Inaugural Ball on the 20th and Hospitality Day on the 21st. Despite the expected hordes, Mrs. Lindley expects that everyone will be comfortably housed. The housing committee, headed by Mrs. John McClintock, is opening up headquarters on Wednesday afternoon at 509 14th st.—at the corner of Pennsylvania ave. It's expected that over 50,000 private rooms will be offered to the visitors at reasonable prices. A volunteer corps of 50 women will inspect the rooms, try to see that no tourist is gypped. Letters from those offering rooms range from a lady who states her family has clean towels every week and would like $80 for a four-day stay in her spare room, to a chemist inquiring whether 25 cents would be too much charge for an extra person! Republican ladies with large houses are expected to be cooperative and anyone with an extra bed, with no Inaugural guest in it—will be decidedly out of the picture. The hospitality committee, headed by Mrs. William O. Douglas, is arranging teas and receptions all over town, is making Washington an open town on the 21st by keeping open throughout the evening museums, interesting Government buildings like the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and such exciting spots as FBI headquarters. Mrs. Charles Brannan, wife of the Agriculture Secretary, is taking charge of children's activities. Though the program's still tentative, tours for older children are being arranged, playgrounds being projected and special arrangements being made to care for the handicapped. Inaugural hostesses, equipped with every variety of information, will be stationed in hotel lobbies and other vantage points. Branches of the housing committee will be set up in Virginia and Maryland. Nice touch to Wednesday's headquarters opening, it's rumored, will be a wreath swathed in a ribbon with the legend R.I.P., and presented jointly to Mrs. Lindley and Mrs. McClintock.

Indeed A Gay Parade

MAKEUP of the inaugural parade is still somewhat nebulous. But it will march past the presidential reviewing stand for a minimum of 2½ hours. Army G3, under General Gay, at the Pentagon, is fixing the line of march. Every arm of our services—West Pointers, Annapolis Middies, Coast Guard Academy lads, mechanized Cavalry and Airborne troops afoot—will be represented in the most impressive show imaginable. So that everyone will know what's what, the official souvenir program, assembled by Edward Boykin, already has assigned Paul Caemmerer to write "Pierre L'Enfant and the Washington Plan." John Claggett Proctor is writing a cavalcade of inaugural history. A 300 to 400-word statement is being prepared by President Truman. Articles by other prominent writers, plus a quiz on Washington by Mr. Boykin, biographies, histories, pictures, American history background will round out quite a tome to save for the grandkiddies!

The Gala Concert on Inaugural Eve will be staged in the National Guard Armory. There'll

All Ships Turn Homeward at Yuletide

By Elizabeth Maguire

CHRISTMASTIDE draws all ships home. Through gray skies and seas diplomats head for bright hearths and holidays. U. N. is expected to close its session in Paris, and visitors in Washington are planning short stays.

Important visitors now from France are Jean Moreau, Secretary for Air, who arrived Thursday, and Jean Courau, Secretary General of the French Merchant Marine, who arrives tomorrow. No plans have been announced as yet, but there will be many parties in their honor.

Chief of Staff of the Italian Army, Gen. Efisio Marras, is guest of Gen. Omar Bradley. On Friday a luncheon was given in his honor by the Italian Ambassador and Signora Tarchiani. The United States Ambassador to Italy, James Clement Dunn, was among the guests. Ambassador Dunn arrived in town last Thursday.

MME. THORS, wife of the Icelandic Minister, and her daughter, Miss Margret Thors, returned by plane from Paris on Wednesday. They were grounded in Shannon, Ireland, and played gin rummy for seven hours straight while the plane was repaired, but the last lap was made without mishap.

During their stay in Paris, they said, the weather was bad and quite foggy. Miss Thors saw her good friend, Nora Martins, there, as well as Maj. Pat Timothy, attache at the United States Embassy, and Miss Laura Mae Norris of the ECA. All were in good spirits and enjoying life abroad.

A colorful gathering is described by Mme. Thors in the town of Amiens. U. N. delegates and their wives were invited to Amiens last Sunday to inspect the town's new buildings. Mrs. Franklin Roosevelt spoke on the Town Hall steps in fluent French, and was presented an armful of red roses by three litttle French girls—one dressed in red, one in white and one in blue.

NEWS FROM Nepal states that General Kaiser, Nepalese Minister to the United States and Ambassador to Great Britain, has been recalled to assume his duties as senior commanding general of the Nepalese army.

Rani Kaiser and little Tani Kaiser have also gone back to Nepal, and Washington alas will not see them again. Tani Kaiser is 5, and when she was here last spring her beguiling ways drew praise from all Washington papers, as well as national publications.

THE British Ambassador and Lady Franks are off on a tour of the central States. The Ambassador has a heavy schedule of talks in towns and in universities. At the embassy here, Col. J. C. Windsor Lewis has replaced Col. Prior Palmer as Military Attache.

Count and Countess Charles Szechenyi and Baroness Maria de Reitzes-Marienwert of New York City are guests this weekend of the Norwegian Second Secretary and Mrs. Elovius Mangor. At a dinner in their honor last evening Mr. and Mrs. Mangor entertained for the dean of the Diplomatic Corps, the Norwegian Ambassador and Mme. Morgenstierne, Archduke Felix of Hapsburg, Mr. and Mrs. William Randolph Hearst, jr., and Col. and Mrs. Robert Guggenheim.

Suzanne Walsh To Make Debut December 18

THE season's debutante crop continues to grow with the announcement of the debut of Miss Suzanne Walsh, daughter of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Robert Walsh, on December 18. General and Mrs. Walsh will entertain at a tea from 5 to 7 on that day for their daughter at the home of Mrs. Walsh's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Corcoran Thom.

Miss Walsh is a student at Foxhallow School, Lenox, Mass. A subdeb dance on December 29 at Columbia Country Club will be given by Dr. and Mrs. Earle Griffith Breeding for their daughter, Carvel Hynson Breeding, and by Mr. and Mrs. Hugh L. Kerwin for their daughter, Lynne Redgrave Kerwin. The two girls will be presented to society at Christmas time next year.

Miss Joan Russell Cooke and Miss Ann Stirling Putzki, who made their debuts together during the Christmas holidays last year, will give an "after 5" party on Wednesday, December 22, at the home of Miss Cooke in Spring Valley.

Miss Cooke is a student at Colby Junior College, and Miss Putzki goes to Smith. They will be home about December 18.

MISS BARBARA NEVILLE MILLER, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. Neville Miller of Louisville, Ky., and Washington, announce her engagement to Charles Carroll Morgan, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Morgan of Chevy Chase. The bride-elect was graduated from Vassar College in May. Mr. Morgan served two years in the Navy during the war. The wedding will take place in the early summer

MRS. GRACE HENDRICK EUSTIS of Washington, whose engagement to Rear Admiral Neill Phillips, USN, retired, is announced by her mother, Mrs. Ellwood Hendrick of New York and Simsbury, Conn. The wedding will take place January 7 at Mrs. Eustis' home in Georgetown with only members of the two families attending. Admiral Phillips is the son of the late Samuel Phillips and Mrs. Clare N. Phillips of Newport, Ark.

'Through Baseball, We Can't Come to Peace'

By Peter Kihss

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—If American children could talk to European children, or Chinese children, or Australian children, here's what they'd say: They'd talk about their games and their pets; they'd do a little bragging, and they'd want to share their good times and their good fortune.

That's the evidence derived from a sampling of 25,000 letters being forwarded to foreign youngsters around the world from Utah school children, through the Youth of All Nations, Inc., an organization to promote international exchange of ideas, in New York.

The spelling isn't always good in the children's letters. But they indicate a naturalness, rather than coached and calculated sentiment. Samples:

A Farmington boy, aged 11: "I like you was once hungry and starving. It was on a camping trip when all the others left with the food and left me alone. And I was lost after three days in the mountain I was found. So us Americans explain by sending food to you our neighbors."

A Salt Lake City boy, 10: "Here in America we often think about you in other countries. I don't know where I am sending this letter or who I am sending it to. I sure hope we will be good friends so please write me . . . We are studying about the jungle, what are you studying about? I guess you are about starving to death."

Apologizes for Small Gift

A BOY, 10, from Mount Carmel, explained: "I cant send over 7 cents because my father's sheep check hasen't com yet."

A Salt Lake City boy, 9: "I am a good shot with my gun. Also we like to play baseball and I like to ride in a speed boat."

Another Salt Lake City boy, 9, enclosed his own picture, and added: "'I have a friend that came from Europe. Maybe you know him. Once he saved my life."

A Garland girl, 10, sent some gum: "I hope you will like the gum I am sending you. It is my favorite. P.S. You had better take off the paper first."

A Kansas girl, 14: "We are truly grateful for all the enjournment we get living in the United States of America. I dont know how bad it is to feel want for food, clothing and such." She signed herself: "Yours till bear river has cubs."

18,000 Foreign Youths Write

MISS Clara Leiser, director of Youth of All Nations, said the organization has had some 18,000 foreign youngsters writing in, hoping to exchange letters with American youngsters. But she said there was a great need for more American children willing to swap ideas.

One letter, from a 15-year-old boy in Kinderdorf, in the Soviet zone of Germany, came in last week. It said:

"In January, I got letter correspondence through Y.A.N. with two girls in U.S.A. But it wasn't I wished. One only did write twice, and the other only about dance and baseball. Now I've a wish to you:

"Can you send me some other addresses. I'd wish to hear much about American youth-life; their youth-organizations and their politic. I want to hear much, for I know so few. These days I am five weeks in F.D.J. (Freie Deutsche Jugend) school. It is very fine. Please send me some addresses with whom I can discuss over all. Through baseball and so on we can't come to lasting peace."

In Trio of Sisters-in-Law, One Is City-Bred, Other Two Are Country Girls; and They Resent Former's Patronizing View That They Are Hicks

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I'd like a bit of advice on a situation that burns me up. It concerns three sisters-in-laws, of whom I am one.

Ann and I, married to brothers, live out in the country, close to our husbands' work, and our husbands' parents live nearby. Peg, whose husband also works with ours, lives in an adjacent large city, where she and her husband are buying a home—a very nice place.

Peg always has lived in town and "country hicks" aren't very bright, according to her; and she also looks down on the way we live. My husband and I have a rented place, the best we could find in this neighborhood; and while it isn't as nice as Peg's, it isn't too bad and I try to keep it clean.

Backbiting Seems to Go in Circles

BEST OF ALL, I have my husband home every night, while Peg's husband gets home only two or three nights a week, as he stays with his parents, to be near his work, the balance of the time. Peg comes out once in a while to stay overnight with his folks; and those of us in the country see a good deal of each other.

When Peg, the city lady, favors me with a visit, all she can talk about is how much nicer her home is than mine, and how "mean" Ann's children are. Also, she talks about Ann. I kept mum about this and didn't join in, as I try to keep peace in the family; but the other day Ann and I got together and Ann happened to spill a few things Peg had said to her about my children and me!

Now, how shall I treat Peg in future? It's hard to try to be nice to someone like that. Should I "tell her off" the next time she starts to criticize Ann, or let it go? Frankly I'd like to tell her off. Because she lives in town she acts as if we aren't quite her equal and I am getting tired of it. L. B.

City Girl Vocalizes Inferior Background

DEAR L. B.: There is a blunt saying amongst country folk, "Consider the source," which, freely translated, means that people always reflect the high, low or mediocre level of culture in which they originated.

It isn't the fact that Peg is a city girl, who has always lived in town, that stimulates her to rudely patronize and avidly gossip about her country in-laws. Rather, in so doing she is ventilating, unawarely, her abiding ingrained sense of inferiority to certain groups or classes of city "society."

When a person (or minority social group) derives from environment a conviction of being regarded as inferior to certain other persons or groups generally reputed to enjoy more admirable or enviable status, the involuntary compensatory reaction, on the part of person or group that feels "looked down on," is to look around for other individuals or groups that may be disparaged as occupying a still lower place in the social scale.

Folks Everywhere Are Much the Same

SO, WHENEVER you see a person (or group) vulgarly assuming superiority-airs to others, alleged to be lower-class, you have proof that the person acting snooty is trying to salve his own sense of inferiority to somebody or something. Psychologists call this, "trying to build yourself up by tearing somebody else down." Which strikes to the core of Peg's behavior.

If Peg had "quality" breeding, if she were intelligent and nobly democratic in spirit, if her character rested on a good foundation of valid self-respect, she would look out on all the various kinds of individuals and forms of society with respectfully inquiring interest; and although a true sense of values would inform her that certain persons are intrinsically finer than others, she'd use her critical faculties for self-guidance, not as ammunition for backbiting.

As it happens, you feel somewhat defensive towards Peg, which means that you're predisposed to think city folk are somehow more grand than country people; and that's a false unfounded notion. People on both grounds are just the same; they run the same gamut of good, bad and indifferent. So, for advice, see Peg as a person, not as a sort of visitor from Mars. And treat her just as you would any country-bred person who made you as "tired." M. H.

Neighborhood Handyman's Club

There's a lot of satisfaction in being able to repair things around the house. Boys and girls from 10 years or less up enjoy giving a hand if Pop is willing to let him do some of the more interesting repairs and replacements. Often, however, one doesn't have the right materials or tools to do the job. Or there may be some lack of "know-how."

Here's an idea for neighborhood cooperation that may work out in your part of town. Bill Jones always liked to putter around and, over the years, had gotten a fine set of tools together. The Jones youngsters used to like to join their Dad too. Sometimes even mother tried her hand at repairing a light cord or some other piece of household equipment.

Bill was always glad to have any neighbor drop in to use the basement shop. Before long, the Jones basement was being called the "Neighborhood Handyman's Club." Not only did it provide an opportunity to do one's home repairs handily but it became quite a social center. Could your home shop become a "Neighborhood Handyman's Club"? Or are there other families whose shops might be opened to the neighborhood? . . .

Balsam, Fir Trees Last Longer

When you buy a Christmas tree, choose a balsam or a Douglas fir. Their needles will remain as long as three weeks indoors.

Spruces dry out faster and drop their needles two or three days after being taken into a warm house, which makes them more of a fire hazard.

How can you tell the difference? By their aroma, according to the Bartlett Tree Expert Co. Balsam has a delightful, fragrant odor. Bruise a few needles of a spruce and the odor is distinctly unpleasant.

There's a difference in needles, too. Balsam needles are comparatively horizontal, a bright green on top, a bluish-green beneath. Needles of spruce are sharply pointed with stripes of white dots on each side.

Mrs. Eisenhower Joins General on Visit Here

By Norma Lanum

WASHINGTON'S service set continues to play host to military leaders from all over the country.

Last week's out-of-town guest list was topped by Gen. and Mrs. Dwight D. Eisenhower. They were at the Statler Hotel Tuesday and Wednesday; the general was on business and his wife came along to see her close friends here and to meet again with her mah-jong and bridge group.

"Mamie" Eisenhower gave a luncheon at the Statler Wednesday for several Army wives. The lone gentleman in the group was George Donald Gruenther, 8-week-old grandson of Mrs. Alfred M. Gruenther, and son of Capt. and Mrs. Donald C. Gruenther now stationed in Philadelphia, Pa.

Naturally every one was pleased to see Mrs. Eisenhower again, but young George decidedly stole the show. His grandmother had been taking care of him for the past few days so when she heard from Mrs. Eisenhower Wednesday morning she bundled up the baby and took him to the party.

That evening the mah-jong group met for supper and cards at Major General and Mrs. Gruenther's quarters at Fort McNair.

MRS. ROBERT PATTERSON, wife of the former Secretary of War, will be in town this week to attend a meeting of the citizenship committee. She'll also spend some time with her JANGO friends. Mrs. Patterson cofounded the Junior Army and Navy Guild Organization during the war and has maintained constant interest in its work since she and her husband moved up to their estate in Garrison, N. Y. She'll be the guest of Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. J. Lawton "Lightnin' Joe" Collins at their Fort McNair quarters.

LIEUT. GEN. NATHAN TWINING left Thursday for his headquarters in Alaska. He had been in the Capital for several days on a business trip and was the guest of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Frank Everest and then of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Patrick Timberlake.

MAJ. GEN. AND MRS. CHARLES LAWRENCE have been the guests since Thanksgiving of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Fred Smith at Bolling Air Base. The Lawrences will leave today, but before returning to their quarters at Keefer Field, Miss., they will spend some time in Florida.

OF INTEREST to many Army Air Force families here is the announcement that Miss Judy Jamison will be married Tuesday in San Antonio, Tex., to Capt. Herman Caldwell, United States AAF, an "All-American" football player from the University of Alabama.

The bride-elect is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Glen C. Jamison, for many years stationed in the Capital, now in San Antonio.

MAJ. AND MRS. HENRY B. SAYLOR, JR., entertained at a farewell cocktail party Friday in honor of Maj. and Mrs. Donald Thompson. The Thompsons will leave soon for Offutt Air Base, Omaha, Nebr., where the major will serve as aide to Gen. Curtis LeMay.

Miss Maryann H. McLean, whose parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Lawrence McLean, have announced her engagement to Dallas De Silva Johnson, Midshipman, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth K. Johnson of Marsing, Idaho. The wedding will take place in the chapel at the United States Naval Academy, Annapolis, in June. Mr. Johnson is a member of the class of 1949

Engagements Of Interest to The Military

Mr. and Mrs. Wesley Marshall Giles of Alexandria, Va., have announced the engagement of her daughter, Miss Artie Frances Burke, to Lieut. Col. Milo Peter Anderson, U.S.A.A.F., son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Andersen of Denver, Colo.

Miss Burke was graduated from Temple Business College and also attended George Washington University. She is now employed in the office of the Comptroller, Headquarters United States Air Force.

Colonel Andersen was graduated from Colorado State University where he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Kappa Delta Pi and Lambda Sigma Tau. The wedding will take place in January when the colonel completes his training at the Air Command and Staff School, Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base in Alabama.

Saunders—DuPre

Capt. and Mrs. E. E. Saunders, USN, announce the engagement of their daughter, Marie Caroline, to David Louis DuPre, jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. David L. DuPre of Chevy Chase, Md.

Miss Saunders attended Chevy Chase Junior College, the University of Maryland, and was graduated from George Washington University. Her fiance attended George Washington University where he was a member of Sigma Nu fraternity and he is now studying at Montgomery Junior College awaiting entrance to medical school. The wedding will take place in January.

Willenbucher—Imlay

Capt. and Mrs. Franz O. Willenbucher, USN, ret., of Greenwich Forest, Bethesda, Md., announce the engagement of their daughter, Dorothy Elizabeth, to Carl Hudson Imlay, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles V. Imlay of Chevy Chase, Md.

Miss Willenbucher was graduated with honors from Swarthmore College and last month she received her bachelor of laws degree from George Washington University Law School where she was a member of Phi Delta Delta.

Her fiance, a graduate of Harvard University and a veteran of four years' service in the Army, also received his law degree from George Washington. He served on The Law Review and was a member of Phi Delta Phi.

Nothing Says I Love You With Quite Such an Air As a Pretty Nightie For Your Lady Fair

By Peggy Preston

LISTEN CLOSELY, my lads, (and stop looking for a minute) for here is a story you all should hear. It tells all you need to know about a highly elusive kingdom of living—how to tell your wife that to you, at least, she is still the most glamorous girl in the world.

You can tell her best during the Christmas season when the world is a whirl of goodwill. How best to say it? Surely not with a mechnical household gadget, however much she needs one. Nor with an impersonal check, to be spent as she sees fit. Say it as a caress, with a beautiful, impractical piece of lingerie, preferably a nightie.

After all, boys, Lana Turner isn't the only gal who can do justice to a diaphanous nightgown. Just give the Little Woman a chance.

Never think she won't adore it. Maybe (and we warn you) she will wrap your gift in its rustling tissue paper and tuck it away, unworn, in her bureau drawer. But that's just because she likes it too well to wear it. Confusing, isn't it? Yet, that's the way with women, and the male of the species is happiest when not questioning such matters.

Just What Is Her Type?

FIRST OFF, just what type is your wife? Forgotten, eh? Never did know, never could quite figure her out?

Well, we know how it is. So, for your consideration Jean Spadea, The Washington Post's fashion artist, has pictured on this page a delectable nightie for every type of woman. All you have to do is think and reflect a bit—then add the information you find here.

Let's suppose she is a woman with a hobby, an avocation, an interest outside the home, or what have you? Say she is on the presidential side—the kind of girl who becomes head of every organization she joins. She is efficient, self-reliant. Then, by all means give her a black, chiffon nightgown, feminine and fragile.

Every woman's apparel shop in town has a selection of these garments right now. We saw one the other day that had us drooling. It was of black chiffon, all right, but it was also a heavenly sweep of accordian pleats. There was never anything so impractical, nor so desirable.

In sketch A, Jean portrays a filmy black nightie that almost any woman would dote on. It has a delicate tracery of lace at top and bottom, and for sheer transparency it can't be beat.

Practical—and Wonderful

BUT SUPPOSE your wife is so practical she scares you! Then give her a nylon nightgown, like the one in Sketch B. No ironing! With this she can be practical and gay as well as practical and grim. There will be no need to hoard such a garment, for nylon is all but indestructable, may be laundered indefinitely without ill effects. This particular model is of pale, sky blue, fashioned with full, flowing skirt and satin midriff. Wonderfully wistful, isn't it?

Then, if she is a middlin' personality—half outdoorsy and self-reliant and half clinging vine—give her one like in Sketch C. Here we have a satin garment, cut with few frills and bows. But smack over the bosom line is a band of sheer, shirred chiffon, gathered with bits of ribbon. It's original and charming. She'll love it in any shade—but better make it in pastel.

But suppose she has been your bride for 20 years or more! She's due for something special. Shall we say pure silk satin and imported, handmade lace? Right down there in Sketch D is what you are looking for. There is nothing like first-grade satin, superbly cut, to rediscover a good figure. And the combination of creamy satin, plus lace is classic. This is one of those prized handmades by Yolande, the kind she never feels she can afford to buy herself.

P. S.—Chances are the Man In Your Life hasn't so much as glanced at this page. Call his hand, girls. Clip this out of the Sunday paper and place it smack in the middle of his desk. That'll fix him.

Quaint, womanly, divinely deceptive is the old-fashioned cotton nightgown shown in Sketch F. Made of fine chambray with hand-made lace, this will delight the city sophisticate who wants to be ultrafeminine at night

One Big Change in Inaugural Plans

be about 5300 seats at $10, positively no passes, except for the working press. The show, half concert, half variety, will last about three hours. The decorations will be SOMETHING. There'll be a symphony as well as popular orchestras, the musicians to be paid by Mr. Petrillo! Stars, needless to say, are breaking their swanlike necks to get on the program. Carter Barron, the impresario on this end, has received hundreds of letters pointing out just which of the theatrical gentry worked for Dewey. No star can just make a bow, all will have to perform. Two masters of ceremonies will introduce the talent. It's planned to be the greatest concert-variety show in history, and, it's hoped, a money-maker to cover other inaugural deficits. (Deficits, for instance, pile up in building the grandstands. It actually costs $12 to build a $10 seat. For some odd reason the cheaper seats cost more than the expensive!)

Invitation and $10 Admits One

THE inaugural ball, chairmanned by Edgar Morris, is a strictly invitational affair. Tickets will cost $10 each; box prices haven't been set. Top-ranking members of the Diplomatic Corps will be invited, Governors of every State, including New York's Governor Dewey, will be invited, as well as a long list of distinguished guests. The presidential box will hold 50. Oh, yes! The ball's being given in the Armory, which has no less than 80,000 square feet for dancing.

Curiously, no record of inaugural mechanics has ever been kept. So, to help along any future inaugurals, the Bureau of Archives has stepped in. Complete records of the 39 inaugural committees are being kept systematically. The material thus assembled will be passed on by a board of professional archivists, headed by Dr. Wayne C. Grover, United States Archivists. Records will include copies of all correspondence, telephone conversations, conferences, funds used, meeting minutes, weekly reports, clippings—and individual diaries to be kept by committee heads. Betty Lindley is looking forward to making HER diary well worth posterity's attention! Seymour Pomrenze, in charge of archives at inaugural headquarters, is anxious to have newspapers, magazines, rural, city, labor, conservative, send him clippings of everything written about the ceremony. All clippings will be collected in scrap books, saved for future reference. Address them to the Tariff Building, 8th and E sts. nw.

Here's the inaugural groundwork: It'll be filled in with fascinating detail as weeks pass. This department, planning its own archives, will keep readers up-to-date on happenings consequential and trivial. Meanwhile, dust up the spare room, shine the extra teaspoons, prepare for the greatest tidal wave of countrymen ever to hit these parts!

Church to Hold Annual Bazaar, Turkey Dinner

The annual bazaar and turkey dinner of Transfiguration Episcopal Church will be held Wednesday and Thursday, December 8 and 9, at the church, 1415 Gallatin st. nw. Mrs. C. E. Women serving on the various committees include Mrs. Anna Kettener, Mrs. Norman E. Ryon, Mrs. Robert A. Joyner, Mrs. T. A. Bodine, Mrs. William A. Sollers, Miss Juliet Ford, Mrs. Bessie W. C. Benzler and Mrs. Ralph D. Coyner.

Still others serving on committees are Miss Laura Kahlert, Miss Edna Beck, Mrs. M. A. Moreland, Mrs. Elizabeth Ford, Mrs. E. M. Hasbrouck

★ FOR YOUR gardening friends (and for those non-gardeners who like flowers at home) Top Recker has a number of Christmas gift suggestions this week.

★ THERE ARE several brass flower pots, one with a round bucket handle and ball feet. These are lacquered to prevent tarnishing. You might also like a simple, low bowl, in copper which is fine for low flower arrangements. This bowl will also double nicely for fruits, candy or dining table centerpiece arrangements. All these ideas are modestly priced.

★ A PAIR of our richly decorated Borghese wall pockets should be just the things to flank a lovely fireplace. These are molded of Borghese's special composition, several in grape-and-leaf themes, and sumptuously antiqued. Filled with ivy or other greenery, these are quite handsome.

★ TWO NEW and stately vases now displayed at Top Recker are worth your attention. These are of Italian pottery, classically urn-shaped, with delicate pastel decorations. They should provide a pleasant challenge to serious flower-arrangers.

RUSH SEASON note: Our new location is easy to find in Alexandria, and parking your car nearby will be no problem at all.

WASHINGTON debutantes have added learning Princeton University songs to their many pre-holidays activities. The Princeton Triangle Club will be in town December 20 to give its show, "All in Favor," at Lisner Auditorium and a committee of popular young ladies will serve as ushers, hostesses and chorus for the production. Shown above are (left to right) Misses Clara Mills, Ruth Saul, Adrian Dunn, chairman of the committee, and Virginia Warner

D. C. Debs Plan Royal Welcome For Triangle Club Players

When the Princeton Triangle Club arrives in Washington on December 20 it will get a royal welcome from 11 of Washington's prettiest debutantes. Sandwiched between rounds of partying, the club's show, "All in Favor," will be held at Lisner Auditorium at 8:30 p. m.

Debutantes on the welcoming committee are Miss Adrian Dunn, Miss Gwendolyn Fairlamb, Miss Ruth Saul, Miss Elizabeth Murdock, Miss Virginia Warner, Miss Dore Martin, Miss Clara Mills, Miss Sherrard Marthinson, Miss Amy Willard, Miss Helen Willard and Miss Florence Walker.

A group of 10 subdebs who will usher at the performance are Miss Alice Watson, Miss Anstiss Goodhart, Miss Fredrica Sterling, Miss Katherine Miller, Miss Judith Blair, Miss Sharon Barbour, Miss Ann Legare, Miss Rose Kean, Miss Katherine Alexander and Miss Betty Smith.

"All in Favor" is a satire on small-town politics in the mythical hamlet of Elmblight, Ind. It involves an election fight in the late 1920's, a love triangle, a minstrel show and a sturdy "girls" chorus.

Washington is the first stop that the Trianglers will make after "All in Favor" opens in Princeton December 10. After its visit here, the club will be feted in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Cleveland, Chicago, Milwaukee, St. Louis and Columbus.

Tickets for the Washington performance will go on sale on Monday, December 13, through December 20, at the United Nations Club, 1701 19th st. nw., from 10 a. m. to 6 p. m.

The New Gadgets

More and More Men Are Doing Less and Less

By Sam Dawson

New York, Dec. 3 (AP).—Man's struggle to get someone or something to do his work for him is being rewarded again in a variety of fields.

Women seem to be the chief winners just now, although a number of new products will help businessmen to save labor, too.

The things that have been thought up recently to make life sweeter and more leisurely for women represent many long hard hours of toil in laboratories, drafting rooms and factories. Here are a few tips for the ladies, and the businessmen:

Now the little woman doesn't have to empty the vacuum cleaner bag. This chore is described by Hydroway, Inc., of Philadelphia as "bothersome." The company is producing a vacuum cleaner that picks up dirt and dust through a hose and blows it down the sink drain, mixed with water. The rubber hose, product of United States Rubber Co., is as flexible as an accordion. It can stretch to five times its original length, so that the housewife can clean all the rooms on one floor of her home without moving the machine.

Now mother can have a row of nonspilling, nondripping and self-sealing plastic containers for baby's oil, sterile water and boric acid solutions. She doesn't have to clean up spots after using them, and she can operate them with one hand while keeping junior in line with the other. All this is on the word of the Menda Co. of Pasadena, Calif.

Shelf paper that is washable and grease resistant is being made by E. W. Twitchell's packaging division in Philadelphia. The paper is coated with polythylene resins.

A combined hot plate, air circulator and space heater is announced by the C. M. Isletts Industries of Detroit. The company says the electrical gadget can be used as a circulator with only the fan operating, as a heater with hot air passing through the deflector, or as a hot plate by removing the deflector.

A Little Coloring

If the homemade ice cream is nicely flavored but rather nondescript in color, add a drop or two of vegetable coloring to give it some character. Frequently peach ice is delicious but needs just a little bit more color to make it attractive and it may be the same in other flavors.

About Fruit Cake Recipes

To M. J. W. and M. A. D., who have requested a recipe for dark fruit cake:

DARK FRUIT CAKE

1½ cups sifted cake flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon nutmeg
½ teaspoon mace
½ teaspoon cinnamon
¼ teaspoon allspice
¼ teaspoon cloves
1 cup shortening
½ cup sugar
½ cup light honey
5 eggs, well beaten
6 tablespoons orange juice
¼ pound candied lemon peel
¼ pound candied orange peel
¼ pound citron
½ pound candied pineapple
½ pound candied cherries
½ pound dates
½ pound raisins
¼ pound broken pecans
½ pound broken walnuts
½ cup sifted all-purpose flour

Sift together cake flour, baking powder, salt and spices. Cream shortening until soft and smooth; gradually add sugar and honey, beating until light and fluffy; add eggs and beat thoroughly. Add flour-spice mixture and orange juice, beating until smooth. Sprinkle the one half cup of all-purpose flour over the fruits and nuts in a large bowl and mix until each piece is covered with flour. Add the floured fruits and nuts to the cake mixture and mix well. Turn into pans which have been previously prepared by greasing thoroughly and lining with brown paper. Fill pan two thirds full.

Bake in a slow oven (300 degrees F.) for approximately 2½ hours. When cool, the cakes should be stored in a tin box. You may leave the paper in which they were baked on them, or it may be removed and the cake wrapped in cheese cloth which has been saturated with sherry or brandy. Cakes may be cured several weeks before serving. Be sure to store in a cool place to prevent the formation of mold on the cake wrappings.

I am trying to find a recipe for the "Kentucky Whisky cake." It's a fruit cake made with whisky, cherries, white grapes, pecans, etc. D. J.

KENTUCKY WHISKY CAKE

5 cups flour (sift before measuring)
6 eggs, beaten separately
1 pound white sugar
1 cup brown sugar
¾ pound butter or margarine
1 pint Kentucky bourbon whisky
1 pound shelled pecan meats
½ pound white raisins (cut in half)
1 pound candied red cherries (cut in pieces)
2 teaspoons nutmeg
1 teaspoon baking powder

Soak raisins and cherries overnight in the whisky. Cream butter until fluffy, add sugar, and beaten egg yolks. Beat well, then add soaked fruit and remaining liquid. Use a little of the flour for flouring the nuts, and add the remainder to mixture. Add nutmeg and baking powder. Fold in beaten egg whites. Add lightly floured pecans last. Bake in a large greased tube pan or in two smaller ones lined with greased paper for 3 or 4 hours in slow oven (300 degrees Fahrenheit) until done.

Let cake cool thoroughly, then place in large, tightly covered container. Stuff center hole with cheese cloth soaked in whisky if desired. Wrap in heavy wax paper.

To facilitate slicing without crumbling, it is a good idea to keep the cake in a refrigerator or other cool place during the holiday season. The slices soon warm to room temperature when you are serving them.

I packed away our woolens last summer in a green metal, office type trunk and placed moth crystals inside. When I opened the trunk this fall I found that the inside was damp and that everything touching the sides had stuck to it. The clothing was wrapped in tissue paper, but I had two wool blankets that have green paint stains on the satin bindings. The bindings are pink and a peach color. Could you tell me anyway that I could remove the stains at home? I had my husband wallpaper the inside of the trunk to keep things from sticking. Is there any way to keep the inside from being so damp? Do the moth crystals cause the dampness? W. B. M.

I know of no satisfactory way to remove the paint from the satin bindings. My only suggestion for restoring the blankets is to replace the bindings with new ones which can be purchased by the yard in notion departments.

To prevent the inside from being damp, be sure it and the articles to be stored in the trunk are thoroughly dry before closing. It is a good idea to sun the inside of the trunk for several days before storing things in it. Then when closed, place the trunk some place where the air surrounding it is dry. An upstairs closet or attic is best. In the high humidity months it would also be a good idea to place a container of calcium chloride or a dehumidifier in the closed closet to absorb the moisture from the air. The dehumidifiers can be bought in housewares departments and the calcium chloride can be purchased at most hardware stores.

The moth crystals do not cause dampness.

Is there any local source where one can obtain sponge rubber in thicknesses suitable for chair pads? Can it be cut to order for the desired shapes and sizes? D. J. S.

Sponge rubber for upholstery can be purchased in the upholstery department of most department stores. It is sold by the square foot. It is not cut to order, but it can be easily cut with large scissors.

Can you give me a "prescription" to help out a kitchen linoleum floor? Since this is an apartment, we do not want to replace it. It is old, worn, and apparently completely neglected by previous tenants. I don't think it has ever been treated to anything but the scrub brush; and we find it gets so very dirty that we have to use strong cleaning agents. If you could prescribe a series of steps we could take to improve its appearance and make it easier to keep clean, we would appreciate it. It is a light marbleized color. R. F.

Strong cleaning agents should not be used on linoleum because they destroy the gums in it. A minimum amount of water and a pure mild soap should be used in scrubbing. When thoroughly clean, give the surface several coats of wax to build up a protective coating. Apply the wax thinly, let dry thoroughly and then polish. It would be wise to rent an electric buffing machine for a day and apply several thin coats of wax, buffing each coat until a hard surface is obtained. To maintain this surface, apply water only when necessary and rewax when it shows signs of wear. Light soil can be removed from a waxed surface by wiping with liquid wax instead of washing.

Also, there are linoleum lacquers on the market which could be applied instead of the wax. It is most important that every trace of wax be removed from the surface before applying these finishes. To do this, wipe with benzine. This is quite inflammable so be sure to have ample ventilation in the room and take every precaution against fire during the operation. Linoleum lacquers are put out by several paint companies and can be purchased at most well-stocked paint stores.

I have quite a bit of trouble with the tank in our bathroom sweating during cold weather. Do you know of any way I can prevent this? S. S.

Condensation occurs during cold weather because the water flowing into the tank is so much colder than the air surrounding it. Under normal conditions, the temperature of the water in the tank should soon rise and the condensation disappear. In the case of a continuous condensation, that is an indication that the tank mechanism is leaking so that there is a continuous flow of cold water through the tank. Possibly there is a leak in one of the valves. I would suggest you ask a plumber to check the mechanism.

A TRICKY WAY TO BAKE GIFT FRUIT CAKE for Christmas is in candied grapefruit, orange, or lemon shells. Here's the way you prepare, fill, and bake them:

First select the most perfectly shaped oranges, lemons, or grapefruit possible, choosing fruit that is clean-skinned and free from blemishes. Wash and cut slice from top of each fruit. Remove inside of fruit with teaspoon, melon baller, scissors, or whatever implement it takes, but be careful not to break shell. Cover shells and "lids" with cold salted water. (Use 1 teaspoon salt to each quart water.)

Bring to a boil and cook 5 minutes. Drain. Cover again with fresh water and boil 5 minutes. Repeat process about three times or until bitter flavor is removed from peel and peel is tender, but not tender enough to break apart. Invert the shells to drain on a wire rack for at least an hour or overnight.

For 5 to 6 large oranges or grapefruit, prepare a sirup from equal parts of sugar and water. Add a fourth as much corn sirup as sugar. To each 4 cups water, 4 cups sugar, and 1 cup corn sirup, add ½ teaspoon glycerine. There must be enough sirup to thoroughly cover and float the fruit. (Remaining sirup after confection is finished may be used for other preserves, hot cakes, etc.)

Cook shells in this sirup until sirup gives a jelly test (about 220 degrees Fahrenheit.) Let stand in sirup over night or longer. Reheat and cook 10 minutes. Cool in sirup and let stand in sirup until ready to use. Before filling with cake mixture, drain sirup from shell. Fill shells with your favorite fruit cake batter and steam about 2 hours.

This may be done by putting water in the bottom of a roasting pan. Cover bottom of pan with a cloth or rack. Set a covered pan containing the filled shells on rack or cloth. Steaming may be done in the oven or on top of the stove. Watch to see that water is kept in bottom of pan. If steaming is done in a regular steamer, wrap each shell in parchment cooking paper.

After shells have been steamed, put the candied tops on each and bake in slow oven (250 degrees Fahrenheit) for 1 hour or until center of cake is well done. Test with toothpick. Cool. Store in a covered container. If this confection becomes too dry, place a fresh orange in the container for a day or two to soften it. These confections will keep a year or more if properly stored.

Broiled Mushrooms on Toast

Clean fresh mushrooms (preferably small ones) and remove stems. Use stems in soup or stew. Roll the caps in a little milk and place, cap side down, on a buttered broiler pan. Broil 3 minutes, turn mushrooms and broil 3 minutes longer. Sprinkle with salt and pepper to taste. Place mushrooms, cap side up, on circular pieces of dry toast and stick a toothpick into each cap. Serve immediately.

In case you decide to serve this hot snack as a special treat, have everything ready in your kitchen and you can make it in 7 minutes. Or, just heat broiled, canned mushrooms.

Black Market Gone

Materials Production Increasing

HOME builders are about to cross off one major obstacle to home construction: lack of building materials.

Increased factory production, coupled with a recent seasonal drop in home starts, makes it reasonably painless for a bu ilder ordering materials. He is generally assured of prompt delivery on most items, in contrast to a scarcity of many materials last year.

Notable exceptions are structural steel and quality lumber for trim, with cement already predicted to be in short supply next summer.

There seems to be plenty of sheathing and framing lumber, shingles, gypsum products. It's the exception to the rule when a builder has to close up a job because of lack of any one material.

Outlook Isn't Too Rosy

THERE are many products in which it's a touch-and-go proposition to meet demand. Nails, sheetrock and rock lath fall into this category. Doors, windows and other millwork are in short supply, but lumber prices generally are under those of two months ago.

"The day is passed when everyone used substitutes or black market materials," said Sidney Hechinger of Hechinger's "Now everyone is getting their fair share, although sometimes it isn't as much as is needed."

He said sewer pipe, nails and millwork were in much better supply.

Nail customers are limited to three pounds of any one kind of nails, he added. Thus, a man needing three types could buy nine pounds. It is only within the last two months that adequate supplies of lumber and millwork have arrived, he continued.

The J. Frank Kelly lumber yard reported clear white pine is still in short supply, but, generally, the lumber situation had eased considerably. A spokesman said that some speculative builders have been forced out of the market by the curtailment of funds loaned by banks.

Cushwa Brick & Building Supply Co. said steel is the only material now in short supply. A spokesman said he could foresee no price drop in materials. "The outlook next spring will depend on builders obtaining construction loans."

1949 Cement Shortage?

IN THE matter of cement, a survey revealed that local dealers have plenty on hand, for the first time in months. But, dealers point out, things will be plenty tough next summer. Here's what they say:

"Seasonal changes have made cement available locally," declared one dealer, who requested anonymity. "Demand is still good, however. Looks like it will be scarce again next year."

Transit Mixed Concrete Co.: "We use bulk cement and there's plenty of that at the moment. Shortage will be as bad or worse in 1949 than this year. The 1948 construction volume has been estimated at 18½ billion dollars, with more predicted next year. With no appreciable increase in cement production seen for 1949,

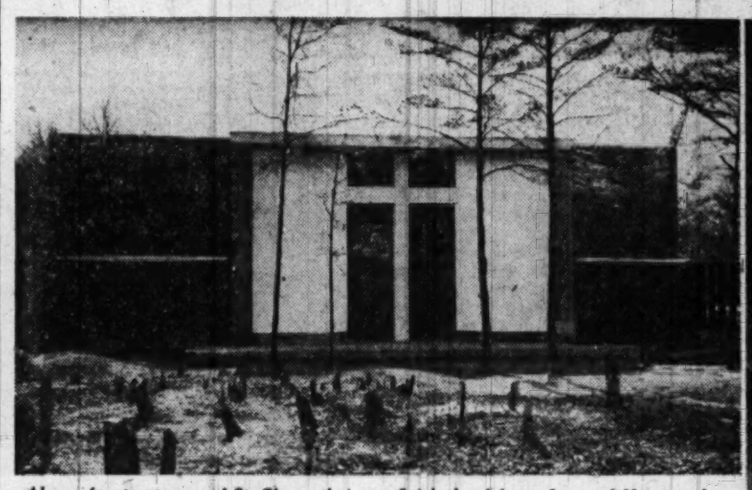
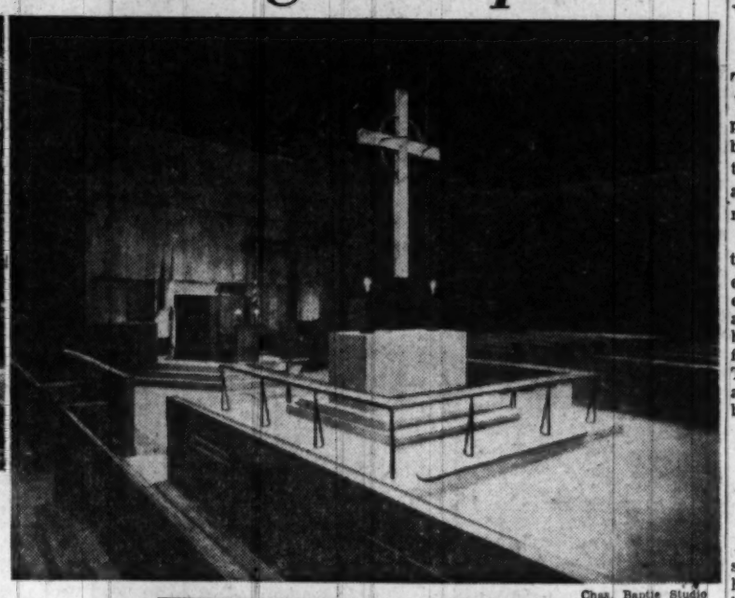
Windowless Church Erected in Alexandria

Brick and Mortar Weave a Religious Spell





Chas. Baptie Studio

Above, front entrance of St. Clement's is not finished. A large figure of Moses and Elijah will grace the two sides connected by the 20-foot white mosaic cross. Church will front on Oakcrest, a new street expected to be built next year. Right, inside view of unconventional church shows altar in the middle of the floor, with congregation seated on each side, facing one another. Rector Darby W. Betts commented: "St. Clement's has taken its place in the vanguard of a movement to awaken the church to the effectiveness of building in the pattern of this age"

St. Clement's Boasts Many Innovations

By Conrad P. Harness

A RECTOR, architect and builder have pooled their talents to perfect a church in which man can worship in a twentieth century setting.

Gone are the stained windows, soaring towers and cavern-like chapels of other years. Contemporary architecture, with windowless walls, now shuts out worldly distractions as Episcopalian worshipers enjoy a dignified setting which inspires and refreshes.

The church is St. Clement's, on Seminary rd., Alexandria, Va. Just completed by Cowles Construction Co., it is hailed as a radical departure from conventional church architecture, converting the new sciences of artificial illumination and air conditioning into utensils for worship.

Designed by Joseph H. Saunders, jr., of Alexandria, with many suggestions from the Rev. Darby W. Betts, its 36-year-old rector, the $140,000 structure has two pronounced departures from conventional church interiors; the altar is placed in the center of the church, with pews on two sides so the congregation faces one another (see floor plan). The ceiling is like a dark sky, with stars shining brightly.

So many people have asked the Reverend Betts questions about the new architecture that he prepared a booklet, "Why It's This Way." Highlights include:

"The church must speak clearly in current language in buildings as well as in sermons. This has certainly been her history . . . Today the church pursues an uninspired course of imitation Colonial or Goth architecturale . . .

"St. Clement's is breaking out of this rut, using contemporary styling in functional forms . . . the church is first and foremost a family called into being by its Father, who is God. Therefore we sit facing one another rather than looking at the backs of each other's heads as does an audience; we are a congregation, those called together.

"The altar has always stood for God's throne and presence; around the altar is the communion rail . . . Over the altar hangs the empty cross, symbol of the sacrifice . . . The iron rings around the cross symbolize the world transfixed by the instrument that redeems it . . .

"The pulpit, the place of the Word, is on one face of the altar, and the font, the place of birth into the Christian family, on the face of the altar by the main entrance. The entire building represents the first installment on earth in heaven . . . We have utilized every device known to our day to shut out the world . . . in order that we might return to it inspired and refreshed . . .

"We look up into the darkness that reminds us of the vastness of the mystery of the overbrooding presence of God, and all variations of light and darkness, heat and cold, wind, rain, snow and sound are shut out . . ."

The exterior of the unique structure is perfectly plain with the exception of the entrance. When finished the latter will show two heroic figures of Moses and Elijah in fresco, representing the Law and Prophets of the Old Testaments. Joining them is a 20-foot white mosaic cross. Steel Prefab Homes Win Navy Contract

THE Lustron Corp., producers of a porcelain-enameled, all-steel prefabricated home, will erect 60 basementless bungalows at Quantico, Va., under terms of a contract awarded Friday by the Navy Bureau of Yards and Docks.

The Government contract attracted inquiries from 25 interested prefab firms, but only seven entered bids. It was the first time a manufacturer of steel homes had bid against conventional prefab firms on a Government contract. The entire housing industry awaited the announcement of the bid award.

The Navy Department said Lustron's bid was not the lowest submitted on a dollar valuation, but was awarded on the basis of lowest cost per square foot of usable space.

"Lustron units, measuring 1066 square feet per three-bedroom house and 891 square feet per 2-bedroom house, totaled 58,710 square feet of usable area for 60 homes, representing a cost of $10.21 per square foot. This was lower than any of the other bids," a Navy statement added.

Dollar Bids Lower

LOWEST bid on a dollar basis was submitted by Home Building Corp. of Sedalia, Mo., at $499,540, followed by John A. Johnson & Son, Inc., of Brooklyn, N. Y., $508,000, and Green Lumber Co., Laurel, Miss., $512,000. Other bidders were not identified.

The housing industry had awaited publishing of the bids to determine to what extent the Lustron price could compete with other prefab firms. The fact that Lustron entered the competition revealed that the firm's gigantic production line, in a factory formerly owned by the Curtiss-Wright Aircraft Co., was ready.

Since the contract calls for erection of 30 three-bedroom homes and 30 two-bedroom homes, it means Lustron must adapt its production line to produce three-bedroom units in addition to its present standard two-bedroom home.

Earlier this year, Carl F. Strandlund, Lustron president, had revealed plans for addition in 1950 of several new floor plans to a Lustron line which now features only a two-bedroom, livingroom, dinette, kitchen, bath and utility room.

Must Start Soon

THE Quantico units will house families of married officers and enlisted men at the Marine Corps School. Sites for houses already have been prepared under a separate contract. Roads, walks, electricity, gas and sewer lines have been installed. Lustron must connect each home with the services.

The contract provides that the first 10 homes be completed within 50 days after the contract is awarded. Thus, Lustron would have to be in immediate production to fulfill the contract.

The contract also stipulates that the next 20 homes be completed in 120 days, with the remainder ready in 240 calendar days. Bidders were given only 10 days in which to file bids. The rush was attributed, it was said, to the Navy's desire for an immediate start so concrete foundations for the homes could be poured before freezing weather.

Charles E. V. Prins, head of Lustron's Washington office, said the Government would allocate steel for the project in order that Lustron's steel supply could be used to provide homes for the general public.

Homes to be erected at Quantico are of the following dimensions: 35x31 feet, for two-bedroom homes with porch; 39x31 for three-bedroom homes without porch.

Unassembled parts for a complete Lustron house will be trucked to the site and erected by a factory-trained crew. C. P. H.

Kerr Finds Buying Cheaper Than Renting

Unable to rent at what he considered a reasonable figure, Senator-elect Robert S. Kerr of Oklahoma has purchased a four bedroom home in the Kenwood section of nearby Bethesda, Md.

"We tried to find a place to rent but rentals were sky high and we found it cheaper to buy," he declared. James L. Dixon was the broker.

Brick and Mortar Weave a Religious Spell

ment and man's failure through atonement.

Directly over the main entrance and behind the cross is a mural of the Last Judgement, signifying all men must face God before they enter His kingdom, represented by the interior of the church.

The booklet ends, "This is the form and symbolism of St. Clement's, which strives to present in simple, functional, contemporary dignity the eternal verity of the Christian Gospel to the modern world.

Its physical features boast such things as a combination heating-air-conditioning system producing comfort during summer heat waves of winter snowstorms. A two-bedroom apartment is provided for the rector on the second floor of one section of the church. All inferior walls in the new church are of open, red brick, the same as the exterior.

The new structure is actually a "church within a church." A small brick chapel, built for $19,000 by the Diocese of Virginia before there was a single communicant, opened its doors on Easter Day, 1944.

The chapel became the self-supporting Church of St. Clement before the end of that year. Today the church has 500 members, largely drawn from the vast Fairlington and Parkfairfax apartment developments nearby.

The original chapel has been retained, engulfed in the ambitious building program. It now serves as a parish meeting hall and Sunday school. Weekdays it doubles as a meeting place for the Boy Scouts, Cubs, citizen associations and other nonchurch groups.

Although the original chapel faced Seminary rd., the new Church of St. Clement was designed to fit an irregular site, with its west side on Seminary rd. and the main entrance facing north on Oakcrest dr. The latter street is still a dream of highway planners, although its construction is expected to begin next year.

The new building has been financed through gifts of church members and the Diocese of Virginia, plus mortgages totaling $100,000. The debt is being paid off at the rate of $700 monthly.

English Chancellor Scoffs At Lights, Heat in Church

Carlisle, England, Dec. 4 (AP).—The chancellor of the diocese of Carlisle says he is against proposals to disperse the immemorial gloom and dampness of English churches. He says it might encourage naps during sermons. A consistory court recently considered a proposal to install lights and a heating system in the church at Gilsland.

"If the heat in a church becomes excessive people might go to sleep during the sermon, or at least have an excuse for doing so," said Chancellor H. H. King. "Also, we don't want theatrical lighting in churches." The chancellor disapproved installing electrical heating tubes under pews.

"It might easily result that people kneeling to pray would put their feet up against hot pipes," he said. "The worst thing you can do with boots is to put them up against hot pipes. If they have rubber soles they make a smell."

The whole project was tabled for reconsideration. Cumberland mists will continue to invade the Gilsland church on frosty Sunday mornings.

Stylists' Fad

Streamlining Of Furniture Is Criticized

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—A chair should look safe and comforting, not like a jet plane about to take off.

This support for people who look fearfully at some ultra-streamlined furniture comes from Prof. Earl D. Hay of Iowa State College.

Things like chairs, whose job is to be stable and stationary, should give you a feeling of rest and quietness, he told the American Society of Mechanical Engineers today.

"A lawn chair should have the appearance of stability, rather than give one the feeling he should hold it down for fear it would take off down the street," he said.

Such chairs are an extreme example of "nonfunctional streamlining," and some "superficial stylists" have made a fad of it, Professor Hay added. But he predicted it wouldn't last very long.

Development of household machines, automobiles and airplanes calls for a new kind of machine designer, he said. He should be "basically an engineer," but also know enough are to design for form and pleasing appearance.

Professor Hay said this is an age of simplicity in design. The simpler the design, the lower is the cost of production, too, he added.

Puerto Rico-to-New York Migration Keeps Up

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Dec. 4 (AP).—The net annual increase in population in Puerto Rico has been cut down nearly 50 per cent during the last three years, due to the fact that emigration of Puerto Ricans, especially to New York, has kept on steadily, according to official statistics offered by statistics division of the Puerto Rican Bureau of the Budget.

The official figures reveal that from January 1 to September 30, 1948, the total leaving the island has been 33,277 in excess of the total arriving. During that period in 1947, the number leaving was 23,909 in excess of the number coming in.

The Bureau of the Budget indicated that should this emigration continue for the next few years, its effect upon Puerto Rico's excess population will be noticeable. It is believed that the emigration will continue due to the high interest among Puerto Ricans in finding better jobs in the United States, coupled with the fact that the insular government's Labor Department now has a division to help persons get adequate jobs with United States firms.

Follow Rules When Washing Linens

It's time for woolens, but how to keep them clean and fluffy, that's the question. You can safely wash your finest wool garments at home, to say nothing of your blankets and you can save time, energy and money, too, when you use a household washer. Laundering books furnished by the washer makers, as well as by the leading soap companies, tell how. Follow the rules carefully, enjoy the attractive, satisfying results.

Construction Volume in '49 To Equal 1948

CONSTRUCTION volume next year will be on a par with 1948, but rising material and labor costs will make it cost more, the Government has predicted.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics said dollar volume of new construction next year is expected to reach a new record of $18,750,000,000, about 5 per cent, or slightly less than one billion dollars above the 1948 mark.

Most of the increase is expected to be in new public construction, with outlays by private builders remaining about the same.

On the basis of the predicted dollar volume, BLS estimates that contractors will employ about 2 1-3 million workers at the 1949 peak month, expected in September. This is about the same number engaged in August, the peak month of 1948.

Other highlights of the Government's look into 1949 included:

About 875,000 permanent homes and apartment units would be started, exclusive of farm properties. Around 30,000 of these would be public and military housing.

The anticipated 1948 volume of starts was set at 925,000, of which not more than 15,000 would be publicly financed.

About 15 per cent of the expected 875,000 units would be of multifamily apartments compared with 10 per cent this year.

Third Building for Miners

The Washington Post

Two-building structure at 1435-37 K st. nw., purchased by United Mine Workers

John L. Lewis and his United Mine Workers have taken title to their third Washington office building. The newest is a two-building structure at 1433-37 K st. with a front which is common to both sections. Five stories high, one building is occupied by American Air Lines under an eight-year lease while the UMW occupies the other.

J. Rupert Mohler, jr., realty broker who handled the sales transaction, said the price tag was "approximately $600,000. He said a prominent builder had advised him it would cost over $750,000 to reproduce the buildings.

The UMW purchased the Insurance Building, 15th and I sts. nw., for around one million dollars in October, 1946. They also own and occupy the old University Club at 15th and I sts. nw. on the other side of McPherson Park from the Insurance Building. The former was purchased for $275,000 in 1936.

The K st. buildings originally were erected to house the luxurious offices of two prominent real estate firms, Harry Wardman and Shannon & Luchs. Both are 28 feet wide, with one elevator each.

Tile, Brick Plants Producing Heavily

The tile industry's 38 plants will produce 20 per cent more clay floor and wall tile this year than 75 plants produced in the boom year of 1929, the Tile Council of America said yesterday. At the same time, it was learned that brick production during October exceeded all postwar records.

"Five hundred and eighty million brick were produced during October, nearly 15 million more than any previous month since VJ-Day," the Structural Clay Products Institute declared.

Tile products output for the first three quarters of 1948 was 16 per cent higher than for the same period of 1947 and 12 per cent greater than for the entire year of 1946.

a shortage will occur. As for price, there's been no change since August."

Howat Concrete Co.: "Plenty of cement available this winter, but it will be tight next summer. Most acute shortage this year occurred in bag cement, which we don't handle. It hurt the small builder. Last price increase was on October 1."

Alexandria Building Supply: "Coming in better now, but has been short all summer. Price has gone up in one year from $2.85 to $3.50 per barrel. Looks like it will be just as scarce next year. It's hard to maintain steady incoming supply. The demand this year has been greater than could be met. Factory equipment hasn't been overhauled for at least 8 years and breakdowns occur frequently due to constant 24-hour operations."

15 Bungalows Planned For Wheaton, Md.

A 15-home building program will be undertaken by Kramer Construction Co., Inc., at Chestnut Ridge Manor, near Wheaton, Md. A building permit application reveals. Dwellings will be basement-less brick bungalows, measuring 32 by 25 feet.

Anyone Else Lost a City?

Mexico City, Dec. 4 (AP).—Discovery of the ruin of another ancient Mayan city in Quintana Roo Territory has been reported to the National Museum of Anthropology and History.

Archeologist Cesar Lizardi Ramos, a specialist in Mayan hieroglyphics, said inscriptions on two obelisks are dated between 778 and 783 A. D.

The ruins are in Yucatan, 38 miles west of the former Mayan capital, Carrillo Puerto. A Mayan farmer told of finding inscribed stones on his jungle lands in 1944. Lizardi Ramos heard about it recently through a report to the department of education, and went to investigate.

He reported finding numerous small mounds covered by dense vegetation, many with signs of old construction. He found the two obelisks, a large altar with inscriptions, and two smaller altars without writing. The writing on the large altar is worn and difficult to make out, Lizardi Ramos said. Apparently it is not dated, he added.

Russians Get in Act

Moscow (AP).—The ruins of Kolodyazhin, one of the ancient cities of Kiev, Russia, have been discovered. The newspaper Gudok said a Ukrainian expedition headed by V. K. Goncharov found the once-powerful fortress city which was besieged by the Tartars without success. The gates of Kolodyazhin were finally opened by trickery on the part of the Tartars and because of its heroic resistance it was burned and all the inhabitants cut to pieces. Excavations reveal the city was surrounded by double ramparts with double trenches. Many Slav and Tartar armaments have been found including arrows, axes and spears.

Pine Logs Prove Durable

Moscow (AP).—They had some real pine wood back in the days of Peter the Great. Evening Moscow announced that restoration work on the House of Peter the Great in the village of Kolomensk, near Archangel has been completed. Constructed of pine logs in 1702, the original logs are still in good shape and none of them had to be replaced in the restoration.

Source: Federal Reserve Board

Are housing prices out of line? The Federal Reserve Board's 1948 survey of consumer finances reveals that four out of every five homes purchased last year sold for less than $10,000. In all, more than 2,200,000 houses were purchased by United States families at an average price tag of around $7000. The Washington area, however, was much higher than the national average, due to local home buyers' demand for equipped kitchens, full basements, sidewalks, insulation and other niceties which qualify as "extras" in many sections of the Nation

Money Restrictions Hit Swiss Hotels

Locarno, Switzerland, Dec. 4 (AP).—The general assembly of the Swiss Tourism Association unanimously expressed its regret recently that the French government had forbidden the purchase of Swiss currency in France for pleasure travel to Switzerland. Currency restrictions in many European countries have severely hit the Swiss tourist industry since the war. Many European countries, notably Britain, France and the Netherlands, which formerly provided the bulk of Switzerland's foreign visitors, have banned or greatly restricted holiday expenditure by their citizens in Switzerland.

At the same time, Switzerland's own hard currency has greatly facilitated Swiss holiday expenditure abroad, so that the Swiss hotel industry is further affected by a reduction of Swiss guests.

Disease-Resist... Rubber Strain Discovered

Tucuman, Argentina, Dec. ... (AP).—If another war comes, buying tires may be no problem. The Western Hemisphere may find itself more independent of Far Eastern or synthetic rubber than before.

Discovery of new strains of rubber trees is one reason. A plan ... Amazon Valley plants ... American coastal region is another.

Seven tons of rubber tree seeds of a disease-resistant type have been shipped from interior Colombia, to Turbo, Colombia, and Tingo Maria, Peru.

The new strains are resistant to "leaf blight," the disease that has hampered development of cultivated rubber plantations in South America. Their productive capacity remains to be determined.

Transportation in the Colombia area to the coast is still a major problem in the economic production of the region.

The Washington Post

AN ARTIST'S wife recently was awarded a divorce in California on grounds that hubby consistently put raw onions in the refrigerator, to the nasal agony of his spouse. The uncovered food, it was said developed a flavor somewhat akin to a sun-ripened herring and a dead sponge. This could all have been avoided if the onion-loving Michelangelo had known of "Purekold," a compact air-conditioner which hangs in the refrigerator and eliminates odors and exchange of flavors between foods. The makers claim that with "Purekold," there is no need to cover dishes or wrap foods before storing in the refrigerator. Still more important, meats and other foods won't darken or dry out. Lettuce, salads and cut melons will stay crisp and fresh longer. Secret of "Purekold" is Calonite, a mineral mined in California which has absorbent qualities. Available at Capital Kitchen Craft Co., 1022 18th st. nw.

The "Easy Day" mop has been scientifically designed to combine broom action with dry mopping. It sweeps as it dusts. Its padded construction eliminates scratching or marring floors and furniture. A vacuum action retains all dust particles when the mop is lifted from the floor, yet, when shaken dust is completely released, leaving the mop clean for reuse. The head cannot be shaken off under ordinary circumstances. Available at Lansburgh's or Hecht's.

A unique home heating calculator that eliminates use of reference and conversion tables and saves hours of work in sizing and laying out of heating systems has been made available to dealers and heating engineers by the Stokol Stoker Co., Inc., of Indianapolis. The calculator is small and compact and can be used for figuring heat losses of dwellings, sizing round or rectangular ducts, or warm air trunk lines, sizing automatic coal, oil, or gas-fired equipment. Primarily designed for forced warm air systems, it is equally useful on gravity warm air and wet heat applications. It can also be used for estimating the approximate annual fuel consumption for heating or hot water requirements.

The Stokol offices at 2060 Northwestern Avenue, Indianapolis 7, Ind., furnish complete illustrated instructions with each calculator.

THOSE OF you who have used Masslinn napkins that look like soft paper but are really nonwoven fabric will be interested in knowing that you can have them personalized. Full name or initials will be imprinted in color on cocktail or luncheon size napkins.

PRESS the sides of the unbreakable, flexible plastic bottle with a built-in atomizer and out comes a thin spray of Dew deodorant. This type of container travels well because it will not break, spill or leak. The manufacturer claims there are 700 sprays—a year's supply—in its 2-ounce bottle.

Today's Oil Boom Towns Aren't What They Used To Be

By Bob Johnson, Jr.

RANKIN, TEX., Dec. 4 (AP).—The oil boom town of today is as quiet as your backyard.

Gone are the days when poor men struck it rich overnight, when roughnecks drank bootleg whisky like water and fought in muddy streets for the sake of fighting.

That happened until the late 1920's in new oil fields from Pennsylvania to California. It's still happening in Canada, oil men say, but in the United States the boom town has grown stolid.

Changes in machines, men and laws are behind the boom town's new respectability.

Workers used to have to crowd into an undersized hamlet near the field, or live in tents and bunkhouses on the job because their rattletrap cars bogged down in narrow roads hub deep in mud. Now they can spread out, as far away from the field as they feel like driving over paved highways.

Among today's roughnecks you'll find college men—petroleum engineers and geologists. They're getting ready to be executives by learning the horny-handed end of the business.

Rankin, with a rich new field in her lap, is still a peaceful town of ranchers and storekeepers.

If you are a little too young to remember what happened at towns like Ranger, Tex., and Ragtown, Okla., just after World War I, you can get a fair idea from the old-timers.

"Mostly mud streets and dives, and plenty rough," says Tom Workman.

"Drillers used to buy room and board for two dollars a day. But they made 16 dollars a day. Men with that kind of money are going to find a place to spend it and people who don't care how they take it away from 'em. That's what made it rough."

Rankin's brand new oil field, the Benedum, is only 14 miles to the northeast. Oilmen agree it's a big discovery. A. D. Zachary, who has been a roughneck and tool pusher for 20 years, says it will take at least five years to drill wells in all the spots that have been proven since the discovery well was brought in last December.

Yet there are few signs of a boom in Rankin.

There are a few new fronts on corrugated iron store buildings, a few businesses that weren't here a year ago. But in the middle of town stand vacant buildings—relics of an earlier boom that Rankin fended off in 1947 when a shallow oil pool was tapped nearby.

Rankin, a sheep and cattle ranchers' town since 1912, had 672 people according to the 1940 census. Now sheriff Gene Eckols figures there are 1800 living in town. Many newcomers live in trailer courts. County Attorney John Menefee says some $15-a-month houses are renting for as much as $100 because Upton County has never had rent controls.

But almost any farm town draws bigger crowds on Saturday night than Rankin does.

You may see a few cowboys ambling along Main st., which still has bits of boardwalk splicing its strips of concrete sidewalk together. Along about supper time, oil workers in hard-toed boots give the cafes a brief rush.

But the dust, blowing endlessly off the West Texas plains, is all that stirs much of the time.

Buildings to Be Painted

"Temporary" office buildings "A," "B" and "C" will receive a new paint job under terms of a contract award by the United States Government to Jack I. Bender. The exterior painting will cost $9,845.

Sunday School Contract

Final plans are ready, and bids will be asked next week, on construction of a Sunday school building for the Second Baptist Church at East Capitol and 17th sts.

Electric Panel Home Heating Introduced

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—A method of heating homes by electricity, imported from France, has spread to the commercial building field for the first time in this country.

The heat is supplied by tempered glass panels, 16 by 24 inches, on the back of which are fused grids of an aluminum alloy. A panel gives off heat when an electric current passes through the grid.

A complete installation has just been made in an entire office building on Thirty-fifth st. near Fifth ave.

Warmth generated by the glass panels is known as radiant heat, which warms the walls, furniture and people in a room rather than the air. Radiators and hot air ducts produce convection heat, which warns the air, and the air in turn warms the objects in a room.

Put to War Use

RADIANT heat by glass panels was used abroad before the war. France's Maginot Line had them as well as Parisian apartment houses.

Installations have been made in homes in this country but on a limited scale because the new product has been on the market only a short time. Commercial use has been even more limited.

The building in which the large-scale installation has just been made is a six-story structure housing the Continental Radiant Glass Heating Corp. The heating company holds the patent rights for glass panel heating in the United States by agreement with a French concern.

Basil Needham, president of Continental Radiant, says the costs of a new home can be cut by "at least $1000" by use of the coated glass panels.

For the first time, he says, electricity is on a competitive footing with heat-producing fuels.

He estimates that a 6-room, 8000 cubic foot house, with 220-volt wiring, can be equipped with the necessary master control box, thermostats and panels at a total installed cost of about $500.

That size home, Needham figures, can be heated with radiant panels in this area for about $160 a year, based on electricity at 2 cents per kilowatt hour. The cost would vary with the cost of power and insulation qualities of the house.

Architect Likes System

INSTALLATION and operation costs for all types of heating depend on such highly variable factors as geographical location, material and labor costs, type of home, and fuel charges.

Cyril Benton, the architect who designed the office building, figures the annual cost of electricity at about $3600, based on a rate of 2.9 cents per kilowatt hour. He compared this with an estimated $3000 to $3500 a year for oil heat, depending on the cost of fuel.

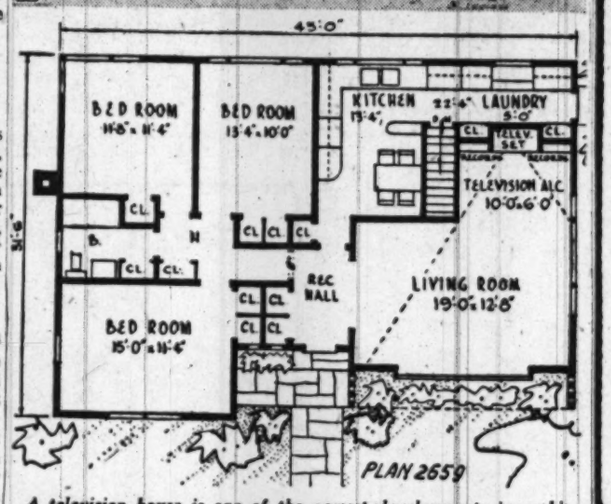
Benton illustrated his opinion of the new heating method, he said, by tearing out of his home in Vermont, a more conventional system and installing glass panels.

Radiant heat is also supplied by such techniques as imbedding coils of pipe, which circulate steam or hot water, in ceilings, walls and baseboards.

Two other companies, U. S. Rubber and Goodyear Tire & Rubber, make panels in which heat is generated by electricity. The heat is produced in the panels by the flow of current through conductive rubber sheets.

New York alone has as many telephones as all of either Latin America or Asia.

Built Around a Video Set



A television house is one of the newest developments in architecture. This plan 2659 by Herman York, architect, 199-33 Keno ave., Hollis 7, N. Y., is designed with a shaded alcove in the living room to accommodate television set, radio, record player and home movie screen. The house covers an area of 1285 square feet. The architect says he is convinced from experience that television becomes a new center in a home, superseding the fireplace. He believes that new homes should be planned for television even in areas not yet covered by video

This Week In D. C. Real Estate

THE WASHINGTON Real Estate Board is giving its members plenty of time to collect toys for the board's fifteenth annual Christmas party. They will be distributed to worthy families through the Washington Council of Church Women—a custom started some years ago. Toy offerings last year overflowed four large receiving tables.

As usual, the affair will take place in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom. The date: Thursday, December 23, at 12:30 noon. J. C. Weedon, jr., chairman of the program committee, promises the Christmas party will be the biggest affair of the year. A fine lunch, music, entertainment and special door prizes are other attractions.

The Administration's recently announced program to boost more low-cost housing in 1949 was the main topic of discussion Wednesday as key officials of six Federal agencies met to lay plans for Federal participation in the housing drive.

Raymond M. Foley, housing administrator, sparked a group consisting of Fred L. Garlock, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Department of Agriculture, dealing with farm and rural housing; J. Marshall Mayes and Lindsay Howell, of the Department of Commerce; Thomas B. King, director of VA's loan guaranty service; Joseph and Paul Akin, for RFC and Federal National Mortgage Association; plus A. J. Wickens, Bureau of Labor Statistics, and A. R. Cleary, Bureau of Apprenticeship, Department of Labor.

Those at the meeting whose agencies directly operate in the housing field included FHA's Franklin Richards, William K. Divers of the Home Loan Bank Board and Abner D. Silverman of Public Housing Administration.

Foley laid before the group tentative plans for launching a Nation-wide series of meetings early next year with all segments of the housing industry to stimulate more erection of low-cost homes and rentals.

Each agency agreed to formulate proposals within its own field of responsibility to make available information and assistance to help private industry concentrate on the lower cost and rental fields.

Data on Uncle Sam's role in housing during 1947, together with information on housing activity in general, is available to the public for 75c per copy at the Government Printing Office. Official title: First Annual Report of the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

M. Pomponio & Sons, Inc., Virginia building and realty firm, has added the insurance business of Ricker Properties to its own insurance facilities. George D. Ricker is now associated with the firm, as are Guy Ballard, Paul Paxton and Anthony Denice.

Two national trade publications, Practical Builder and Business Week, have predicted that the postwar housing boom, supposed to have passed its peak this year, has enough momentum to make 1949 a top-notch year.

On the same train of thought, William H. Stead of the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis predicts a particularly bright future in real estate up to 1960. His reasons:

"1. The growing demand resulting from population increase; 2. the vigorous efforts being made in the direction of regional planning and development; 3. the probable improvements ahead in construction techniques and a consequent increase in the productivity of construction workers, plus 4, some relief from antiquated building codes which will reduce the costs of construction." He gave his views in the current issue of The Review, published by the Society of Residential Appraisers.

Theodore H. Maenner, Omaha, president-elect of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, and other newly chosen officers, will be installed at a series of meetings at the Statler, January 8-13.

SHORTS: National Electrical Contractors Association predicts a continued high level of electrical construction during 1949 . . . More than 73 per cent of the homes sold in St. Petersburg, Fla., in a recent two-month period, were purchased by Damyankees, a realty survey shows . . . Herman T. Stitchman, New York Commissioner of Housing, stated yesterday at Chicago: "With respect to public housing, the Government should confine itself to financial grants to States on some kind of matching basis which will encourage them to go out and do something for themselves. This will help keep government at the local level where it belongs. It will prevent the danger of bureaucracy and will lessen the opposition to a Federal housing program."

Garden Club to Elect Officers Monday Night

The Woodridge Garden Club will elect officers Monday night at Sherwood Hall, 22d st. and Rhode Island ave. ne., as it celebrates its twenty-second birthday. Prof. J. B. Norton of the University of Maryland, will show slides of day lilies.

New Plants Follow Customers

New England's Loss Is West's Gain

By David A. Stein

HORACE GREELEY'S crystal ball may have been focused on 1948 when he admonished the Nation's youth to go West.

Today the Far West and Southwest are centers of spectacular industrial development. New plant construction in the Southwest is triple the Nation's average rate. In the Far West, factories are going up at a pace even greater than in the booming war years.

Postwar construction in the West—and in the South as well—is shattering wartime records, according to a recent survey by McGraw Hill industrial publications. Half the new mills and factories are being built in those two regions, which had only 25 per cent of all the prewar plants.

New England, Middle Atlantic and Great Lakes States, which provided almost three fourths of the Nation's manufacturing jobs before the war, housed only 55 per cent of the new wartime plants and are getting only 45 per cent of new construction now.

Consumer Markets Shift

WARTIME changes in the industrial map gave impetus to the westward and southward shift, but other factors are responsible for the Nation's industrial migration. Such Government developments as TVA and Bonneville power have determined some plant locations. New incentives were provided by postwar reductions in differentials between freight rates in the East and those in the South and West.

The great change in consumer markets is a major reason for the shift. Because the South and West have increased their shares of the Nation's incomes from 38 to 44 per cent since 1939, these regions now have less industrial capacity relative to their markets than they had when war began.

Populations in the Far West have shown sharp increases, and other regions of the South and West have shown healthy gains in per capita incomes. Ranked by sizes of income increases, the Far West leads the country, with the Southeast, Southwest, Far West, Great Lakes, Middle Atlantic and New England States following in the order named. Wartime training built up skilled, efficient labor forces in the fast-growing regions, thus reducing relative labor costs.

Migration and decentralization may be given new emphasis by preparation against the threat of atomic war, but even without this incentive the present trend is expected to continue for some years to come. This is true because expanding populations increase local or regional markets for a wide variety of manufactured products.

New England Loss

NEW ENGLAND'S share of factory jobs has been shrinking consistently for many years, and this region has suffered the sharpest losses since 1939. Its postwar total of industrial jobs is lower than in 1919. Historically a soft goods producing region, New England has increased its share of durable goods production in the past few years.

Only 20 per cent of new plant construction has been credited to the Middle Atlantic States, in contrast to a 30 per cent share of existing employment. Thus the region is expected to take further cuts in its over-all share of the Nation's manufacturing. However, Mid-Atlantic shares in five industries have risen since 1939, and it is holding its own in apparel and miscellaneous products.

The trend away from the Great Lakes has been slight but general. Until recent years this section has been the heart of United States industrial growth, but losses in regional shares are expected in heavy goods industries concentrated there.

Textiles and lumber have been responsible for the greatest gains in the Southeast. The region is expected to continue a moderate industrial growth. The Far West has increased its job shares in 18 of 20 manufacturing lines since prewar days, and postwar construction indicates a continued mild but general industrial advance.

Plane 'Bombs' Utah Desert With Fertilized Grass Seed

Skull Valley, Utah Dec. 4 (U.P.)—Here about 60 miles southwest of Salt Lake City, a former doctor and dentist turned inventor and soil conservationist has set out to bring more value to a land that grows little more than greasewood and cheatgrass.

The project being carried out on 15,00 0acres of this isolated, semi-desert area was conveived about 30 years ago. Its originator is Dr. Lytle S. Adams, a 65-year-old native of Kentucky who was graduated from St. Louis University with degrees in medicine and dentistry.

But Adams' first love was osil and water conservation. He began to develop this aerial pellet reseeding project of grass after he discovered why a certain cactus plant grew so abundantly near San Diego, Calif., in land much like that in Skull Valley. He found that the plant's seed was spread and germinated in rabbit droppings.

With Government sponsorship, Adams first tried seeding from airplanes in New Mexico in 1944. He used a pellet made of dry, compressed loam, clay and fertilizer, which weights and protects the five to eight seeds each contains.

The pellets, about the size of a small grape, are sown about nine to each square yard of ground covered. The capsules are heavy enough that they won't be scattered by the wind. They become adhesive when damp and soften, allowing the seeds to germinate in an average yearly rainfall of about 9 inches.

They are scattered widely enough to eliminate the necessity of thinning and the bunched seeds tend to compete with one another so that the hardy ones survive, Adams says.

The Skull Valley project has been organized by the United States Bureau of Land Management, one of whose duties it is to preserve and reclaim federal ranges such as this.

Starving People Pin Hope on Irrigation

By Sherry Bowen

SUNBURNED MEN guide flowing water to green trees or to clover and grain fields. Great dams feed thirsty rows. Grand Coulee, one of America's newest, is almost ready to pump new floods into old stream beds of the Northwest.

Grim faced workers man the valves that drain precious water from drought-depleted Roosevelt Dam, one of the oldest. Wells and pumping plants fill long ditches on more of America's 30-odd million irrigated acres.

These are hot political themes in the United States. The West will send engineers and lawyers to the Eightieth Congress. Advancing with their brief cases, they will ask politicians to make good on campaign promises. They want more such programs.

Russia now has a 15-year farm plan which includes water for many thousand desert acres. And all over the world, starved peoples cry for more irrigation. It is estimated a fourth of the world's people depend on irrigation for their food. It's an ancient business.

Pictures at least 4000 years old on Egyptian tombs show men working the shadoof. This is a pail tied with a rope to one end of a pole. The pole is balanced on a fulcrum and a weight at the other end helps raise the pail. It is still widely used.

Archimedes, the ancient inventor, is said to have made the first "screw" which still bears his name. A corkscrew shape in a cylinder, turned with a crank, it can raise water about 3 feet up the bank of a stream or pond.

THIRSTY ACRES—30 million in U. S. are fed by ditches

Another ancient machine still widely used is the sakia. It is a line of buckets on an endless rope to bring water from a well or pit. It is said the sound of the sakia has been woven into the music of the East.

Farm experts think the first real nations, perhaps 7000 to 10,000 years ago, must have been in irrigated areas. Men who live along an irrigation ditch must learn to live together. Only after irrigation schooled it, could civilization move out across the world, they say.

The old engineers did jobs on a scale that rivals that of modern times. Herodotus, for example, tells how Egyptians stored Nile floods in a lake in the Fayum district. Then they let it run down stream as needed. Only in recent times has such control of the Nile been restored.

When, in the seventh century, Moslems surged to power in the Middle East, drove across North Africa and up into Spain, they took irrigation with them. They made fine farms of many areas which have since gone back to desert.

In recent times, even in remote Yemen, engineers have studied the old farms in hopes they could be brought back to use.

The story is the same around the globe. In China's back country treadmills and high water wheels raise water to the fields.

In the Philippines and Java, the rice terraces march up and up to the very mountain tops. They bring water to crops which are often said to grow on land on which more human toil is expended than anywhere else in the world.

In the American Southwest, old Indian irrigation ditches run for scores of miles across country—often in dry deserts to which the white man has not yet brought water. At Casa Grande, a four-story watch tower still stands. From the ground around it, amazed students dig polished ornaments and utensils of great beauty.

In North Africa and the Middle East are ruins of great cities now being dug out of old, old goat pastures. Once those cities were fed by great irrigation works long since crumbled. The Negev Desert, where Jew and Arab fight, once had a large population.

Now irrigation engineers are going back to old sites—to Egypt, to China's river valleys, to Palestine. And they plan new projects in Moscow, Washington and other capitals of the world.

Japan Enforces Ban On New Paper Houses

Tokyo Dec. 4 (U.P.).—Japan has put legal teeth into its effort to replace bamboo and paper houses with modern fireproof buildings.

Under a new national law, Japanese may no longer erect "buildings other than those of ferro-concrete and other fireproof structure" within designated areas of 14 large cities, including Tokyo and Yokohama.

Supplementary antifire rules affecting architecture are now in force for districts outside the "designated areas."

Boyd Hogge, owner and builder, will erect six stores at 202-04 E. Monroe ave., Alexandria, Va., according to a building permit application. Units will be of one-story, no basement, of brick and cinder block construction.

Realtor Predicts 'Stripped' Houses

Atlantic City, N. J., Dec. 4 (AP).—The new 1949 home in New Jersey may be put on the market "stripped" of such things as wallpaper, porches and paint.

Harrison L. Todd of Camden said today in an interview real estate operators are seeking ways to cut costs of new homes.

Todd was nominated for president of the New Jersey Association of Real Estate Boards at its thirty-second annual convention.

Todd said some home buyers may prefer to purchase a house without the usual decorations. These buyers could paint the houses themselves, put up the wallpaper and add refinements at a later date, he said.

Let's Get Down To Earth!

Use Distinctive Shrubbery on Irregular Lots

By Henry B. Aul

ODD SHAPED properties offer certain advantages in home-ground development. When planned carefully to utilize the unusual aspects of the site, the results are almost certain to be refreshingly different from those on the regular rectangular lot, where the lines of the house and those of the property parallel each other.

The home ground shown in plan and perspective in the accompanying illustration is a modified trapezoid. It is 80 feet across the front, twice that distance across the back, 119 feet along the left side line and 158 feet along the right side line. While this is not a small property, it is its shape which has influenced the design to include gardens and other features that, in size and variety, are more often found on much larger properties.

Advantage is taken of the deep right, back corner to develop a deep planting as background for the main ornamental garden which is swung in that direction. Not many average - sized properties have the space—in any direction—to permit a garden and a heavy background planting of its own. This planting, combining evergreen trees, flowering trees and shrubs, spaced far apart, has sufficient depth to be developed as a shaded wild-flower corner or grove.

Dogwood Background

THE eight flowering dogwoods, spaced 15 feet apart in a curve extending from the corner planting to the house terrace, are combined with shrubs to complete the background for the long border of bulbs, perennials and annuals. The curve of the border, accentuated by the curved line of the flowering trees in the background, gives the garden unusual extent as viewed from the terrace.

A bed of 3 dozen roses, backed by a hurdle-type fence, is a balance of interest on the opposite side of the garden lawn. Not all of the lawn can be seen from the terrace or porch, for it curves out of sight to a tree-shaded bench located against the side-line fence. The rose planting is stopped before it reaches the terrace, leaving room for one tall shade tree that will keep the lounge cool on summer afternoons.

The terrace is built at an angle with the house so that it faces toward the garden and the south. It combines a spacious lounge with a work corner and a service walk to the kitchen door, all of which is shielded from the north and the street by the house, porch and garage. The work corner is behind a high fence which adds width to the house as viewed from the street, by extending the front wall of the garage.

Work Corner Facilities

BESIDES being convenient to the storage facilities of the garage, the work corner is fitted with a weathertight tool shed, a potting bench, sink, slat-shaded plant bench and shelves. A four-sash cold frame, a fenced-in compost corner and a combination grill and trash burner complete the equipment. A socket in the paving, near the grill, receives the laundry drying rack on wash days.

This work space, with the vegetable garden and rows for strawberries and seedlings, is separated from the main ornamental garden and garden lounge by the hurdle fence that forms a background for the rose planting. The vegetable garden rows are laid out parallel with the fence to make their spacing exact and easy and because that direction is nearly north and south, insuring equal sunlight on both sides of the rows.

The terrace, which is a year-round lounge and location from which to enjoy the gardens, is also used as a vantage point to watch activities on the games lawn and play yard beyond. By following the diagonal line established by the garden and terrace it is possible to have space for doubles badminton, regulation croquet and many other lawn games.

Seclusion Obtained

THROUGHOUT the private portion of the grounds, fences or plantings are used separately or combined to obtain seclusion and background while retaining space for a full development. No side line planting or fences are suggested beyond the front wall of the house. They would accentuate the fact that the property lines converge toward the street and create a comparatively narrow frontage.

Specimen shade and flowering trees are used to frame the house and the front corners of the property without hiding the house from view. Evergreen flowering shrubs and dwarf growing evergreen trees comprise the major portion of the house-foundation planting, the group along the fence out from the garage and the porch. Their north and northeast exposures are ideally suited to the best growth of ornamental evergreen shrubs.

Inexpensive, Simple Ornaments Make Gay Yule

Christmas need not be an expensive affair. It's all in the spirit.

Seven simple, yet gay, tricks for making the old homestead—or new flat—gay as a holiday waltz appear in the current Good Housekeeping magazine.

Here are five:

Swag your fireplace with kindergarten chains of gold and red-and-white candy-cane paper.

Plant your loveliest cards to make a greeting tree, clipping them on sparkly branches set in sand or colored slag in a big flower urn.

In lieu of a tree, hang your beautifully wrapped gifts on a screen, under a thick rope of laurel or pine, jeweled with shiny balls.

How about sticker stars for the tree?

See—it's all in the spirit!

Housing News From Earth's Four Corners

Columbus, Ohio (AP).—The Army will test a new type of all-steel factory-built house under Arctic weather this winter. Carl Strandlund, president of Lustron Corp. here, revealed that two houses were purchased by the Army Engineering Corps and flown to Alaska, where they will be erected in Fairbanks and Anchorage. All parts of the 7-ton porcelain enamel steel house, except the foundation pieces, were transported in one plane load, Strandlund said.

Rentals for Reds

Moscow.—Sebastopol, one of the most damaged cities of the Soviet Union, has built 38 new apartment houses in the first nine months of this year, says Red Fleet. The damage at Sebastopol, the port city on the Black Sea, was often compared with the damage to Plymouth in Britain.

Pitts Estate for Sale

London.—Burton Pynsent, the estate that eighteenth century statesman William Pitt inherited from a stranger, is for sale.

Pitt was willed the Somerset County property by Sir William Pynsent, an eccentric who didn't know the statesman personally, but also left Pitt £3000 ($12,000) a year.

For Sale, One Chapel

Schofield Barracks, T. H.—Want to buy a chapel? The army here has one for sale, complete with 28 wood pews, chancel, movable altar, vestry rooms and offices.

Firemen Dodge Eviction

Mar Del Plata, Argentina.—The ban on evictions came just in time to save the fire department. Congress recently extended all rent contracts for 18 months and halted all eviction proceedings. The firemen were under court notice to get out of their rented firehouse within 60 days—taking the fire engine with them.

Vienna Totals Up Damage

Vienna.—Official Austrian figures set the war damages to Viennese buildings at 16,467,000,000 schillings ($1,646,700,000). The number of houses destroyed equaled the entire number built in 20 years preceding the war. More than 36,000 apartments were completely destroyed and another 50,000 were badly damaged.

Refugees Lack Shelter

Athens.—More than 100,000 of Greece's 650,000 civil war refugees have inadequate shelter to protect them this winter from the cold and snow. The Economic Cooperation Administration and the Greek Ministry of Reconstruction have drawn up plans to provide temporary shelter for 25,000 refugees in greatest need. Work has already started for the erection of shelter in Macedonia, Epirus and Thessaly.

'Big Glass' and Labor Holding Hands

By Sigrid Arne

"BIG GLASS" and its workers may have some of the answers to the losses we all suffer when any big American industry stops work because of a strike.

Big glass bosses and workers have been able to cut down their explosive arguments to almost zero in recent years. Their record is the subject of a special study by the National Planning Association.

NPA is a nonprofit, nonpolitical agency which tries to uncover the roots of national troubles. It is engaged right now in examining some 15 big industries where there is comparative labor peace. It feels "big glass" may have an answer to the "why" when bosses and workers can cooperate to turn out the stuff.

NPA's study of the glass industry was limited to Libby-Owens-Ford (L-O-F) and the CIO Federation of Glass, Ceramics and Silica Sand Workers of America. NPA points out that L-O-F, together with the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co., turns out 95 per cent of the Nation's plate glass, 55 per cent of the window glass, and 90 per cent of the safety plate glass used in autos.

Friendly Bargaining

L-O-F has 7500 hourly-paid workers in eight plants. When the union contracts are written L-O-F and Pittsburgh Plate Glass men sit down together with union men and negotiate the same contract. Leeway is left in the basic contract for variations at different plants.

Here is how the decisions are working out for L-O-F and its workers:

There's been industry-wide bargaining in big glass since 1936. In 1940 management formally recognized it.

On the other hand, the union has recognized the company's right to run the show. But more and more of the production decisions are being made by management and union together.

NPA reports:

"For example, by the terms of the contract management has the right to set new bonus rates. In practice, it nearly always secures union agreement before a new rate goes into effect."

Both company and union stress settlement of day-to-day problems at the plants, rather than at the main office and the international union. NPA reports: "In 1947 an estimated 98 per cent of formal grievances were resolved in the plants. There were no arbitration cases whatever."

Bark Louder Than Bite

NPA THINKS one of the finest elements in the L-O-F worker relations is the manner in which the company is now sharing information with the union, and the responsibility union men have been willing to take as a result.

One such incident arose over putting a conveyor belt into one of the Toledo plants. The company told the union president of the projected conveyor belt. He hit the ceiling, "gave a dozen reasons why the plant would not work," but after much talk and compromise the belt went in.

Says NPA: "The campaign to produce glass cheaply is now carried on simultaneously by the company and union officials. A local union officer explained this issue to the men this way—'So long as the company is making money off men, they aren't going to tie up money in a machine. But they'll either make money off you, or they'll buy a machine they know they can make money on.'"

NPA says both the company and the union have benefitted economically:

"In 1947 it earned the highest profit in its history, more than 11 million dollars, and at the same time spent $9,500,000 for improvements.

"Take-home pay for the L-O-F workers has increased with the increased output. Their average earnings are somewhat higher than those of other mass-production workers."

Movie Magnates Plot to Crack Iron Curtain With U. S. Films

By Richard L. Coe

IT'S CORNY TO SAY IT, but anyone who's ever lived abroad knows that the movies virtually are our most powerful ambassadors.

Top hats, white ties and the ladies with the PX cards notwithstanding, it's the movies that reach the mass of people. Granted, too, that some of our movies reflect an America no one would recognize, ours is so fabulous a country that almost anything you say about it is true, fortunate or unfortunate as the case may be.

But the real point is that our movies do get to the grass roots we've been hearing so much about lately and that the habits of the shadow folk, from their bed attire to their chewing gum techniques, make ours an envied land.

So it is that the meeting next week of the Motion Picture Export Association in New York will be a vital one.

This association has 12 member companies which have combined for selling American movies abroad. It is a useful device whereby, through collective bargaining, a centralized group can obtain better terms than might be managed by the companies operating individually. Some people might even call it a manifestation of "The American Century." It's the same sort of collective bargaining which, when unions apply it to the same businessmen, is often called "communistic."

Two Vital Counts

IT IS a paradoxical situation, too, in that while such a combination might appear a "trust" of suspicious nature, it's perfectly legal. The organization exists under the Webb-Pomerene Act, designed to allow American industries to deal collectively with foreign monopolies without being subject to United States antitrust laws.

But this combination is important on two counts: it helps take our films behind the Iron Curtain and it makes dealing with strongly nationalistic countries simpler.

This state control of films is something we American filmgoers seldom consider, but something our film-makers can never forget.

It is the reason for our picture companies' often confusing policy of self-regulation. It is the reason for censorship that seems to go to the wildest, wooliest lengths. It is the reason for the success of the most absurd pressure groups. It is the reason for the Hollywood industry's stringent self-regulation.

For it is by this strict, even timid, self-regulation that the film-makers hope to avoid governmental supervision. They fear that by stirring up any particular group, pressure might be exerted for the Government to take an official role in films as entertainment.

Once this step is taken the road would be open to that enforced production which is the opposite of our free tradition.

Stagnation Feared

AND SO the world overseas plays its role in this infinitely complex art of telling stories on celluloid. Through fear of becoming one thing, our film-makers have seen as their alternative a policy of kow-towing to pressure groups which can lead to stagnation.

When the movie-makers look abroad they see not only the splendid natural films which the better producers of England, France and Italy turn out. They see governmental regulations as regards imports. They see a tide of nationalism in other countries which serves to make them more nationalistic. They see the mental prisons of celluloid by which a powerful government can shape its people.

They think, for instance, of Hitler's massive films glorifying his racial insanity. They remember the role played by Leni Reifenstahl, who, although declared free of Nazi taint only the other day, certainly once was the embodiment of that very thing.

And they look at Russia, where the Soviet Minister of Cinematography, I. G. Bolsakov, recently announced his plans for a new season, which will include films glorifying Soviet exploits in the recent war. Remembering how curiously the Soviet newsreels depicted, for instance, Russia's role in the Japanese defeat, they find their own national spirit rising.

Not Too Pleasant

IT IS, in short, quite apart from the economic squeezes, not a pleasant thing to look at films on a global basis. What a far cry it is from the idealistic medium which its international creators all conceived. No one in his right mind can rejoice in the endless paradoxes that have resulted from this gift of the scientific gods.

Yet, for all that, one can only hope that when the export group does meet this week, it will decide to continue its work. It's not an admirable choice, but it seems the lesser of two evils.

New Video Station Opening Here in '49

By Sonia Stein

WASHINGTON, which has been balancing the full weight of television on three wheels, will get a fourth wheel in mid-January. When WOIC goes on the air on January 16 or sooner, the programs of the four television networks will be spread around in normal fashion among four stations.

In the spring there will be five networks feeding programs into the four local stations, but for several months programming will be divided up in this fashion: WNBW, an NBC owned station, will continue to take NBC-TV programs as usual; WTTG, a DuMont owned station, will naturally continue to take DuMont programs; WOIC, owned by the Bamberger Broadcasting Service, will take CBS-TV programs, and WMAL-TV, which is owned by the Evening Star Broadcasting Co., will take ABC-TV programs.

Until ABC formed a TV network several months ago, WMAL-TV carried CBS-TV programs. However, since the Evening Star's radio station is affiliated with the ABC radio network, it was logical that its TV station would become an affiliate of the ABC television network as soon as one materialized.

Since CBS-TV then had no outlet here, WMAL-TV continued to take as many CBS-TV programs, along with ABC-TV shows, as it found useful and profitable. Which is to say, in a nutshell, those which were too good to miss, and those which were sponsored and brought in revenue.

Besides offering a service to viewers who would otherwise have been deprived of worthwhile CBS-TV offerings, WMAL-TV was enormously helpful to CBS, which would otherwise have had no outlet in the Capital.

Now, WOIC will carry CBS-TV programs and feed shows to it from Washington, and WMAL-TV will pick up additional ABC video programs and produce more local shows.

In the springtime, WOIC will begin to have the same double-rich choice that WMAL-TV has been having, only it will be the Mutual-TV network and CBS from which WOIC will then choose. Another Bamberger station, WOR-TV in New York, is expected to open in the spring and it will form with WOIC the nucleus of a Mutual video network.

Prior to WOIC's actual opening, it will do a couple of chores for CBS. On December 19, the International Children's Christmas Broadcast from the Shoreham Hotel will be fed by WOIC to the CBS television stations in the Eastern network, although the local station will not be telecasting locally at that time. On January 12, when the Midwest network and the East Coast network are joined, WOIC will handle CBS' share of the celebrating in Washington.

By Inauguration Day, January 20, WOIC will be ready to do its share in the pooled telecast being arranged by all four networks, and ready to start servicing the Washington area on Channel 9, according to General Manager Eugene S. Thomas.

For the big opening, probably on January 16, CBS stars will come to Washington for two hours of televised hoopla.

The studios and transmitter tower, located at 40th and Brandywine sts. nw., are expected to be high, wide and handsome. The 300 foot tower, atop the highest point of land in the District, will be 700 feet above sea level. The studios and offices will be in a one-story building which has a fully finished basement. Located in a semi-commercial zone, the building has had certain limitations put on it, but the station owns surrounding land which can be used for enlarging if the zoning rules are ever changed.

All of the other local TV stations are getting along as best they can in converted quarters, with WTTG in the Harrington Hotel, WMAL-TV in office space in the Commonwealth Building and WNBW in what once was a little theater in the Wardman Park Hotel.

WOIC's program director, James McMurry, who used to be with WBAL-TV in Baltimore, has temporarily taken over some space in a downtown building and keeps its address a dark secret since program directors are always pursued hotly by people looking for jobs, people full of ideas, and just people.

The official downtown offices of the station are in the Barr Building, where the sales manager, William Murdock, holds court. And holding court evidently pays, because 15 sponsors bought 52-week spot announcements the very first day WOIC time was made available. TV, which most frequently exists on radio's charity, must feel a spurt of optimism over that announcement.

'The Silver Whistle' Blows Merry Tune

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—"The Silver Whistle" blew its merry tune into the Biltmore Theater the other evening, enlivening the season even more than was expected.

"The Silver Whistle," at its worst, contains some fairly phoney and pretentious attempts at the classical. It aspires a little to Edmond Rostand, William Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. It misses all three, but is a comfort nevertheless. The author has composed the best opus of the fairly young theatrical year.

Jose Ferrer is starred. He plays a wayfaring indigent, a gent of flowery speeches and seemingly honest disavowal of morals, both of the flesh and of economics. He loathes work, likes people, loves ladies—all of them.

Ferrer, one of the noblest young gentlemen of the Broadway stage, again triumphs in a role riddled at times with silliness, since Robert E. McEnroe, the author, has indulged some broad low comedy, even a few bawdy jibes and japes.

Italy's Great Films Stir Row

By Barrett McGurn

ROME, Dec. 4.—A sign in the window of one of Rome's leading motion picture theaters is indicative of the passionate controversy Italy's successful postwar films have aroused inside their own country.

"No one can laugh at any one who knows how to laugh at himself," the sign says.

Inside the theater the reason for the placard is clear. On the screen is the latest of Italy's post-liberation realistic movies, this one a merciless tragi-comic portrait of anti-Fascist timidity and official corruption during the rule of Mussolini.

Roman audiences, rising to the challenge of the window sign, have laughed unreservedly at the film's caricature of the chicanery and pretensions of Italy's early Fascist period. However, they have wept as the comedy curdles into tragedy, portraying the death and disaster of Italy's final Fascist years.

'Difficult Years'

THE picture is called "Difficult Years." It was written and produced almost entirely by persons who served Mussolini weekly during his generation-long rule. It tells the story of a fictional character allied "Aldo Piscitello" whose "real name," according to the author, Vitaliano Brancati, "in those days was legion."

"Piscitello" was one of Mussolini's finest, a member of the squads of street bullies who served the dictator in the days before fascism took power. At least that is what you would judge from the broad black sash and the red stripes on Piscitello's black Fascist uniform. The truth, according to Brancati, was that "Piscitello" was not a Fascist until years after Mussolini seized control. Piscitello got his party membership and his special regalia with the corrupt help of one of his wife's relatives.

The film gets its laughs from Piscitello's efforts to hide his meek personality behind the mask of might he had to wear as one of Mussolini's strong-arm men.

Ends in Disaster

DESPITE his red stripes and his black sash, Piscitello really was an anti-Fascist at heart, according to the film. He passed long hours with fellow anti-Fascists in the back room of Platania's drug store, complaining about the undemocratic regime. When the Allies landed in North Africa the mayor, the same man who advised Piscitello to get illegal admission into the Fascist Party to save his job, came around to ask Piscitello to spread the word among his anti-Fascist friends that the mayor, too, was a secret sympathizer of the Allies.

The film ends in disaster for Piscitello. The day after the Americans captured the town, the mayor, so secure now in his new reputation for antifascism that the Allied military government chose him to lead the defascization drive, called Piscitello in to discharge him for being one of Mussolini's original Fascists.

By that time his son, a veteran of Mussolini's wars in Ethiopia, Spain and Russia, lay dead at the feet of retreating Germans. In a frenzy, Piscitello runs to Platania's drug store to shout out the picture's moral: "Our sons are dead because we lacked the courage to oppose dictatorship with anything more than secret words."

Critics of the alternately amusing and emotionally exhausting picture have protested that it is an attack on Italy's national dignity.

"Even if it was like that, you shouldn't remind us of it, and you should not tell our private things abroad," some Romans have complained to Domenico Fazzari, the picture's producer.

Several Italian Parliament members and publications have urged the Italian government to consider the suppression of "Difficult Years" and the censorship of some of Italy's other unflattering realist pictures.

"Paesa" (Neapolitan for "Fellow Countryman") described the disillusionment of an American soldier who found that his Italian sweetheart was a prostitute. "To Live in Peace" portrayed an Italian village whose inhabitants were so terrified of the few local German garrison troops that they fled to the hills when it was learned that they sheltered two Americans.

Objective Truth

THE makers of the films have argued primarily that they have painted little but objective truth.

"The fact is that for 20 years, with few exceptions, that's how it was," Fazzar says of his "Difficult Years."

As Italy's reconstruction proceeds, a trend toward less shocking pictures can be rather faintly discerned, but there are still some that will not please Italian nationalists. In fact, it is doubtful that Italy's slow revival, and the corresponding slow improvement of conditions shown in the films, soon will reach a point satisfactory to the opponents of the public laundering of dirty linen before the world.

Ought to Be Married, Says Ava

Stays Up Nights Playing Records

By Hubbard Keavy

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 4 (AP).—I have just come from Ava Gardner's apartment where we had a long talk in the dining room, there being no other place to sit, and I can sum up my reactions in two words—"Gee Whiz!"

The pixy has red hair and green eyes and full lips. She is an animated talker and she talks frankly. She does her hair herself and it gets harum-scarum, in a pleasant way, after she runs her hands through it a few times.

Another role or two like her last in "One Touch of Venus," and Ava will be out in front of many who now are regarded as better actresses. And another such role or two will make folks forget the unfavorable comment that followed her short marriages to Mickey Rooney and to Artie Shaw.

These adventures didn't do her any good with the fans, and she knows it.

She insists she did not marry Mickey for his money, as some said, or to get a movie contract. ("I had it before I met him.")

"I wanted to make a go of that marriage. I was in love with Mickey, really and seriously, but it just didn't work out," she assured me.

Off With High Heels

AVA WINCED when she recalled, with slight prodding, Kathleen Sinsor's separation complaint: "It alleged Artie Shaw had bragged that when Ava was his wife he beat her and threw her downstairs.

Ava denied that allegation, but I will not quote her directly, her expletives were so unpixylike.

About this time she kicked her high heeled pumps off her stockingless feet. She said high-heeled shoes, used only for dress up (she dresses up for interviewers) annoy her. She prefers low shoes.

She doesn't have furniture because she doesn't know what she wants until she gets a house. The $200-a-month apartment is temporary. And bare.

Selecting Leader From Ranks Has Happy Precedent

By Paul Hume

ONCE upon a time, Theodore Thomas, the world famous conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, died.

The orchestra's trustees, men of imagination and sound business sense headed by such names as Marshall Field, looked abroad for a worthy successor to Thomas. Money was no problem for them, and they were willing to spend it freely on their orchestra and on any conductor who seemed the best choice.

Europe did not answer their search. From within the ranks of the orchestra they called upon Frederick Stock to lead the third oldest symphony orchestra in America. Stock was then 32 years old. For nine years he had been first violinist of the orchestra, during five of which he had also filled the post of assistant conductor.

Frederick Stock remained conductor of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra for 37 years, until his death in 1942. From a relatively unknown member of the orchestra he became one of the most intelligent, musicianly conductors in American musical history. The catholicity of his taste is reflected in a survey made a few years ago by Dr. Howard Hanson on the American orchestral repertoire. Stock's record earned his orchestra first place among American orchestras in the wide range of its programs over many years.

One of the Youngest

WASHINGTON's National Symphony Orchestra has a new conductor. At 37, Howard Mitchell is one of the two youngest American-born conductors to be placed in charge of a major symphony orchestra in this country, sharing honors with 33-year-old Thor Johnson now entering his second season as leader of the Cincinnati Symphony.

Mitchell has been first cellist of the orchestra for 14 years, and its associate conductor for 3. He has given ample evidence of unusual talent in conducting a wide variety of works. The breadth of his musical interest was displayed in last summer's Water Gate concerts.

At that time, even with limited rehearsals, he programmed a Bach Brandenburg concerto, substantial excerpts from Tchaikowsky's Eugen Onegin, and such relatively unfamiliar music as Milhaud's Suite Provencale and Ibert's Divertissement.

During the summer concerts Mitchell added to his following of enthusiastic listeners. Their enthusiasm was in appreciation of good music well played.

No Easy Task

MITCHELL'S task will not be an easy one. He must now command men by whose side he has played for years. He must keep their respect, and their friendship. He must establish and maintain an orchestral discipline that will permit the National Symphony to function accurately, without undue difficulty, and with all possible brilliance and sound musicianship.

In repertoire Mitchell will be expected to give Washington the finest kind of music in competition (healthy competition, we feel) with the Philadelphia and Boston Symphonies, and any others that may visit us. Up to now their Washington standards of repertoire could be surpassed without too much trouble. No orchestra deserves to exist which ignores the great literature of the past. No orchestra can build a steady audience if it does not play the finest in new music.

Every orchestra owes contemporary composers the respect of giving their music a hearing.

There are important items of repertoire which the National Symphony Orchestra has overlooked. The reasons for this may be financial or otherwise, but the neglect is nonetheless a danger to a vital existence. We refer to their irregular scheduling of choral masterworks for which the resources of a full-size orchestra is a requisite. The public is interested also in occasional hearings of opera in concert form.

Both Good and Bad

MITCHELL and the National Symphony management have already wisely suggested that there will be illustrious guest conductors leading the orchestra next year. That is, in a way, a good thing. It is also a danger. Those orchestras which are considered great today, or have held that eminence in past years, are orchestras which were led largely by one man. The Chicago Symphony under Stock, the New York Philharmonic during Toscanini's regime, Philadelphia under Stokowski, Boston under Koussevitsky, and San Francisco under Monteux—all these gained their greatest heights under the steady direction of one man.

Guest conductors are useful in bringing a community new facets of repertoire, new sounds from a familiar orchestra, and new insights into old and new music. But it is always a matter of adjustment for an orchestra to acquaint itself with a new leader's technique and style, no matter how great that may be. That adjustment must again be compensated for when the permanent musical director takes over.

Van Druten Play Opens Tomorrow in Baltimore

THE THEATER GUILD—American Theater Subscription Society's first of five Baltimore offerings will open a week's run there tomorrow night at Ford's Theater. The play is "Make Way for Lucia" by John Van Druten.

Bound for New York after its out of town priming, this comedy is drawn from the series of "Lucia" novels by England's E. F. Benson. Van Druten, whose most recent triumph was "The Voice of the Turtle," has woven several of the Edwardian heroine's adventures into a comedy of manners. The setting is a drawing room in a small English village.

Cyril Ritchard, Isabel Jeans and Catherine Willard head the company which also features Viola Roache, Philip Tonge and Ivan Simpson. Van Druten has directed and both settings and costumes are by Lucinda Ballard.

The Guild's other subscription plays in the Baltimore series will include Philip Barry's new comedy, "The Emperor of China," starring Lilli Palmer and Jean Pierre Aumont, and the latest Rodgers-Hammerstein musical, "Allegro."

Washington subscribers already have been notified of bus arrangements for all the Baltimore performances. Further details from the Guild's local manager, Bess Davis Schreiner, who holds office hours in the mezzanine of the National Theater here Tuesday, Thursday and Saturdays from noon until 5 o'clock.

Playing Shakespeare'

IN THE first of a series of productions planned especially for students in this area, Productions, Inc., tomorrow night will present Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Universalist Church, 16th and S sts.

Students from Holton-Arms, Sidwell Friends, St. Albans and Maret schools will be in the audience for the play, which will be followed by an informal discussion between audience, players and director.

A. U. to Offer "Dear Ruth"

"Dear Ruth," Norman Krasna's comedy, will be acted Tuesday and Wednesday nights by the American University Theater in the Clendenen Gym on the campus.

The leading roles in this comedy about a young letter writer will be played by Virginia Hammond, Pat Hines and Bill Cowan. Mary Francis Miller, of the college speech and drama department, is directing.

Others in the cast include John Ward, Marion Radley, Nancy Mason, Bob Stevenson, Floella Murray and Ramon Reno. Jackie Samson and Lou Jones are on the business committee, Eleanor Bartholemew is in charge of properties and Jimmy Bunce and Joy Newport have done the settings.

'Life With Father' at Leland

The Montgomery Players will present "Life with Father" as their second offering of the season next Saturday evening at Leland Junior High School auditorium, 44th and Elm sts., Chevy Chase, Md.

The group, the first of its type to receive permission to perform the play, points out that all but one of its previous Washington performances (that being for the first of the birthday celebrations of the late President) have suffered from the District labor law prohibiting professional appearances of a 6-year-old on the stage. In the Montgomery production, all four of the Day children will be played by boys of appropriate ages.

Reservations may be made by phone at Wisconsin 4685.

Another Cantor in Show Business

Heidt Finals Slated Here Next Sunday

NATIONAL finals of Horace Heidt's celebrated talent search will be broadcast next Sunday evening in Uline Arena as part of a two and a half hour Heidt show sponsored by the Washington Junior Board of Commerce.

HEIDT

Heidt's variety show will begin at 8:30. Proceeds from ticket sales will go to the board's youth program and youth welfare activities.

The bandleader has crossed the Nation twice in this search, which is now in its third network year. During that time 50,000 applicants have been interviewed, 5000 of them by Heidt himself. Each week five have gone on the air for the public to discover and over 50 have played with the Heidt troupe on their tours.

Heidt takes pride in stressing that while similar programs have worked from New York or Hollywood, his show has gone past the metropolitan centers to give opportunity to ambitious youngsters who don't live near the coastal capitals.

Some prominent Heidt winners are assured of a place on next Sunday's program, including Accordionist Dick Contino, Impressionist Richard Melari, Vocalist Tiny Hution, Dancer Harold Peck, Drummer Jerry Rothaus and Xylophonist Pierce Knox.

Tickets for the Heidt show are on sale at Uline's and at the Fairway, 1328 G st.

WGAY Listeners Aim Views at President

WGAY listeners had a chance to tell the President of the United States what they think are the Nation's most pressing problems one day recently.

Morning man Ennen Tannen took the comments over the phone during the broadcast and repeated them on the air. Hitch is, the people don't know yet if the President was listening. His press secretary wouldn't promise he'd listen although he did admit that the President does listen to the radio in the morning.

Meg Stallings is playing Mrs. Manningham, Robert Rence acts her husband, and Lucian Scott dons the uniform of Inspector Rough. All three have been associated in the past with California's Pasadena Playhouse.

Reservations may be made by mail or by phoning Adams 0140.

Repeats on 'Alice' Set This Week

"Alice in Wonderland," the year's first offering from the Children's Theater of Washington, will be repeated by its twin casts Friday night and Saturday afternoon at the Roosevelt Auditorium, 13th and Allison sts. nw.

Sponsored by the District Recreation Board, the Lewis Carroll classic has been adapted and directed by Rose Robison Cowen. Both costumes and settings have been inspired by the Tenniel drawings.

Ava Fresh Out of Prospects For Marriage (It Says Here)

She has looked for houses, but anything she likes is priced at $40,000. She says her salary, which must be about $40,000 a year before taxes, won't permit that much for a house. Ava's manager allows her $65 a week for her maid's salary, groceries and minor incidentals. All large purchases are charged and the bills go to the manager.

Ava says when prices go down she may build the kind of house she wants. She wants a small house with a big living room, one big and one small bedroom and lots of closet space. That seemed to indicate, I thought out loud, that a third marriage is not in prospect.

"How right," Ava almost groaned. "Can't. No prospects. But I wish there were. I'm the kind who ought to be married. You miss companionship when you're not married. Maybe some girls can get along with a career alone, but I'm not the type."

Ava volunteered that her hobby used to be going to night clubs. If she wasn't in one every night she felt she was slipping socially. Now they bore her. "You see the same people, night after night, all a little tight, and they look like bored goons."

HER HOBBIES now are a Cadillac convertible and clothes. She'd buy more clothes if her manager would allow her. He tells her 12 suits, good tweeds and gabardines, at $165 each are enough.

She has lots of sweaters and blouses and "about 100 pairs of shoes, but I wear only three or four of them." And only two black dresses and two evening gowns, the latter "all gee-gawed up" as a contrast, I guess, to the simplicity of her usual attire.

The living room does have a little furniture—two small bookcases. The books are mostly best sellers which have been made into movies. There was a book mark or turned down page someplace in the first chapter in the four I opened. One was autographed by William Saroyan to Mickey Rooney and another had Artie Shaw's name on the fly leaf.

Ava says she gets a lot of fun out of staying up nights, when she isn't working, until 3 or 4 a. m. listening to records. You'd think in a town full of such interesting people she could do better than stay up all night listening to records.

'Hansel' Yule Play for Kiddies

THE Clare Tree Major Children's Theater of New York will offer its annual Christmas play this year on the Tuesday after Christmas, December 28, at Alexandria's Virginia Theater. The play? "Hansel and Gretel," perennial favorite of the famed theater's patrons.

The Tuesday performances will be at the same times as the usual Saturday plays, 10:45 a. m. and 2 p. m. The switch in days is being made because Christmas Day this year is on Saturday.

Mrs. Major's productions are brought here by the Children's Museum of Washington, sponsors of the Trailercoach Museum, at Wisconsin and Western aves. Further information about the Christmas play and other details of Mrs. Major's seventeenth local season may be had by writing the museum or phoning Wisconsin 6823.

Moor Plays Today at Phillips

Left to right, John Jacob Niles, folk singer, at the National Gallery of Art tonight at 8; Lily Pons, soprano, in Constitution Hall on Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.; Paul Moor, pianist, at Phillips Gallery today at 5 p. m.

GOOD PROGRAMS this week are headed by Paul Moor's list for this afternoon in Phillips Gallery. Such piano programs occur once in a decade, if that often.

John Jacob Niles tonight makes the National Gallery a place of the finest miniature art of its kind. His way with folk music is breathtaking.

Lily Pons has a good group on her program Tuesday. Wish more of it were as good. Mary Alyce Bennet singing at the same time comes up with a far finer list. That's about it, except for the Juillard Quartet's Bartok Friday evening.

THE Institute of Contemporary Arts announces a repeat of its excellent Renaissance concert for Saturday, December 11, at 8:30 in International House, 1825 R st. nw. The Bach Aria Group heard last Friday in the Library of Congress can now be heard on Sunday mornings, from 9:30 to 9:45 over WRC. If you like the program and tell the station so, it might grow to a half an hour.

Franceska Kasper Lawson, soprano, will sing tonight at the American-Czechoslovak center, celebrating St. Nicholas Day. Beatrice Pinkney Jones opens a series of three Sunday afternoons, "Milestones of Music" today at All Soul's Unitarian Church—5:30 p. m.

Speaking of radio music, Deems Taylor is now running a sort of classical disc jockey show on WTOP, weekdays from 5 to 5:30. He plays some top music and some corn, with comment to match.

Washington Cathedral holds its annual Christmas carol festival Thursday, December 9, at 2:45 p. m. Nearly 800 students of the various schools will sing. The Cathedral's Choral Society sends word that it can take in tenors and basses for its spring performance of Bach's St. Matthew Passion set for April. Rehearsals Monday evenings, 8 to 10 p. m. Interested t's and b's should appear at 7:45 in St. Alban's Parish House Wisconsin and Massachusetts ave. nw.

Dean Bradley Thomas, organist, plays tonight at 8 p. m. at District Heights Presbyterian Church, 2901 78th ave. se. He will be assisted by Ruth Nicholson, soprano, and Lucius Kingman, violist.

COMING National Symphony programs: December 12, the orchestra with Eugene Istomin, pianist, in the Chopin F Minor. Wednesday, December 15, Mahler's "Song of the Earth," with Nell Tangeman, and Harold Haugh. December 19, the annual Christmas program.

Annual "Messiah" concerts bring the Washington Choral Society December 14, and Baltimore's Handel and Haydn Chorus on December 21. More of these next Sunday.

Productions, Inc., present Valerie Bettis, star dancer now with Inside United States of America, next Sunday, in Baltimore's Museum of Art. Howard University Choir under Warner Lawson, sings its annual Christmas concert next Sunday at 5:30 and 8:30. The program will also be sung in the Department of Commerce auditorium Friday, December 10, under the sponsorship of the East and West Association, free of admission charge.

Selection of Mitchell Augurs Fine Season

Thus it is better over a period of years to entrust the leadership of an orchestra to the man who seems best suited to it, and then to depend largely upon his own gifts to provide that enlightened and stimulating experience which comes when worthy music is adequately presented.

Nothing has yet been said about soloists for the new conductor's first season, and it is early enough that we feel no impatience. This is the time, however, to urge one important point. A conductor should decide first of all what major scores he wishes to play which require a soloist. Steps should be taken to secure the best exponent of those particular works. Where it is desirable to engage some special celebrity for reasons of "name," the conductor should still retain considerable voice in the vehicle in which the "star" appears. Only this way can the finest goals in repertoire be attained.

Advisers Provided

HOWARD MITCHELL will now doubtless be inundated with suggestions and requests. He has wisely secured approval from his board to set up an advisory committee. This committee will probably include a member of the orchestra, and several prominent Washington musicians. From these and other sources the young conductor can get advice as he makes his way.

But there will be nothing tentative from Mitchell, if past performance is an indication of his stature. He is a splendid musician, a great cellist (whose solo playing will be sorely missed as was his predecessor's) and a young American artist and conductor whose future rests with Washington. He deserves every iota of support from the entire community.

No conductor ever pleases everyone. And no conductor is the final authority in every phase of his art. The very element of being human guarantees that men will err. It is also the promise that they can and often do succeed thrillingly. As Washington and the National Symphony Orchestra begin a new phase in their vigorous growth, we congratulate the orchestra's board of directors on their courage and insight in appointing a young American to lead them.

Good luck, and great concerts, Howard Mitchell!

Cigars for Sibelius

CARLETON SMITH, director of the National Arts Foundation, has just returned from Finland, where he interviewed Composer Jan Sibelius, now well into his 80s and unable to procure in his country the "fattest, biggest and best Havanas" which he has smoked for years. Boxes of them have been sent by Mrs. Moss Hart, Marian Anderson, Tallulah Bankhead, Charles Triller and Deems Taylor.—By the (AP).

Giving Artist Right Tune Is Tough Job

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—Picking the right combination of tunes and artists to catch the public's fancy is an uncertain business at best, but it pays off handsomely if you can do it.

A case in point is Capitol Records, Inc., which started from scratch six years ago and expects to pass 18 million dollars in sales before 1948 is over.

Capitol sales are running 25 per cent ahead of last year despite a slump that has pulled the overall industry business down 35 to 40 per cent under 1947.

And the company has more firmly entrenched itself as one of the big four of the industry—along with RCA Victor, Columbia and Decca—that account for 75 to 85 per cent of the record industry's output.

Capitol was conceived in 1942 in the minds of Composer Johnny Mercer, Movie Producer Buddy de Sylva and Glenn Wallichs, youthful proprietor of a Hollywood music store.

With plenty of know-how but less than $50,000 in capital for Capitol, they started making records. They had no facilities and had to lease recording studios and farm out the manufacture of records.

After only $195,000 in record sales in the last six months of 1942, Capitol started to roll. Sales hit $748,000 in 1943 and shot up to $2,253,000 in 1944. They more than doubled to $5,119,000 in 1945 and more than doubled again in 1946 to reach $12,885,000. Last year they climbed to $14,510,000 and for the first nine months of this year passed $13,117,000 with five million dollars in the third quarter alone and Christmas sales yet to come.

Capitol, instead of competing with other companies for services of established artists, developed its own—among them Jo Stafford, Margaret Whiting, Peggy Lee, Gordon McRae, Andy Russell and Martha Tilton.

In recent weeks the company has made three major deals to expand into the classical field and to expand its exports. One gives Capitol full use in this country of the classical catalog of Germany's Telefunken and also gives Capitol distribution of its entire material in continental Europe. A similar contract was signed with two Mexican companies. Under another English Decca will handle Capitol records in England and Africa.

Eve Arden, whom you can hear tonight at 9:30 over WTOP, is making quite a splash as mistress of the biting barb and star of "Our Miss Brooks"

Rome Opera Chorus Sings Verdi Requiem

VICTOR has reissued two of its finest albums. One of these is the panoramic Verdi Requiem. Conducted by Tullio Serafin, and sung by the chorus of the Royal Opera of Rome, this set has been out of stores for years.

GIGLI

Now it is back, with Gigli, Caniglia, Pinza, and Stignani as high-powered soloists in a brilliant performance. If you don't know the music, try the side labeled, "Sanctus" with its double chorus and trumpets, or any one of the Pinza solos. And if you love tenors, try Gigli's, "Ingemisco." Victor 734. $13.50.

The other notable Victor reissue is Ezio Pinza in classic Italian songs. These are songs which open almost every Pinza concert. He sings them with penetrating feeling, and absolute stylistic mastery. The set includes Monteverdi, Torelli, Cavalli, Handel, Scarlatti and others. Victor 766. $4.75.

Jan Peerce in Operatic Arias. Victor 1250. $3.50.

Tosca: E lucevan le stelle; Pagliacci: Vesti la giubba; La Juive: Rachel, quand du Seigneur; Gioconda: Cielo e mar. Peerce with orchestra under Erich Leinsdorf.

Peerce sings these with good line. The Juive aria is particularly expressive. His voice will not soften down to the proper degree for Cavaradossi's haunting scene, but Peerce lovers are content with him even in constant full voice. It's a good album of its kind.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOF: Sadko, symphonic poem. Also: Hymn to the Sun. San Francisco Symphony under Monteux. Victor 1252. $3.50.

Sadko as an opera has some richly imaginative scenes, though it is too long and slow for modern audiences. Sadko, the tone poem, lasting only about 12 minutes, seems long after five. It is Rimsky-Korsakoff without the best of his ideas. Its superb playing in this set will make it palatable for some if not for all. The Coq d'or excerpt is a re-pressing from an older set.

Viennese waltzes: Alexander Schneider and string quintet. Columbia 766. $6.

Here are old-style Viennese waltzes, the forebears of Blue Danube and Vienna Woods. Played by five instruments for which they were originally scored (three violins, viola and bass), the waltzes of Lanner and the elder Strausses come out with a bubble and bounce to match sparkling burgundy. Don't play them all at once. It's a grand idea, and came off very well.

Spirituals transcribed for chamber orchestra by Adolf Busch. Columbia 764. $3.90.

Sorry but these simple melodies arise out of emotional depths which do not come to light properly in the treatment given them by Busch and his men. The honor intended the spirituals is obvious, but they are songs which must be sung by those who understand them

PIERRE MONTEUX
. . . he did all he could from within. The recording and playing is satisfactory.

Kostelanetz: Carnival Tropicana. Columbia 753. $6.

Familiar titles such as Malaguena make this a re-hash of old stuff. If you like (as I seem to have to say so often) this music and Kostelanetz, go ahead. It's your money. PAUL HUME.

Recluse Denies Movies Use of His Property

Director Sidney Lanfield went to Arizona seeking a hitherto unfilmed location for RKO Radio's "Station West." In the town of Cottonwood he was told of a spectacularly beautiful area, which had never been used for movies, and which was owned by an ancient recluse.

Lanfield and his aids drove to the spot. The graybeard met them, permitted them to rave over their "find," watched them draw sketches, make plans.

Then he said: "The movies ain't never been here 'cause I wouldn't let 'em. And what's more, I ain't never goin' to let 'em. So long, gents."

Cast in Guild Play

Viola Roache, Kurt Kaszner, Ivan Simpson and Guy Spaull have been added to the cast of "Make Way for Lucia," the John van Druten play which the Theater Guild will present in New York in December after a preliminary out-of-town tour.

Europe Makes Good Time In Television

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—The United States has a long lead in television, but by no means a monopoly.

The British have had television since 1936, three years longer than the United States. The French have regular television operations and the Russians also have some television, with plans for early expansion.

The big Phillips company—one of the world's largest radio manufacturers—has a station in operation at Eindhoven, the Netherlands.

Neighboring Canada has plans for an early start in television and a number of receiving sets are in operation within range of American stations close to the border. Plans also have been made for stations in Cuba, Australia, Brazil, Argentina, Denmark and several other countries.

However, Britain is the only other country that has television on a sizable scale and operations there are much more limited than those in this country.

Britain has only one station, in North London's Alexandra Palace, with another under construction at Coldfield for the Birmingham area. They will be connected by a radio relay system now being built.

The latest available figures for August showed 61,700 television receiving sets licensed by the British government. At present production rates that means the number now is still less than 75,000.

By comparison, there are 45 stations in operations in the United States and probably 700,000 sets in use.

Symphony Selling Family Tickets

The new Rochelle, N.Y., Symphony is selling "family membership" tickets, with the idea of having parents bring their children to the grownups' concerts. The response has brought subscriptions from about 40 per cent of the prospects.

Pianist Gyorgy Sandor, after a six-week European tour, is back for a Carnegie Hall recital in January.

Maria Jeritza, Raoul Jobin and Alexander Sved are scheduled to feature a performance of "Tosca" in the Newark Mosque next Tuesday.

Variety Show Gets the Big Play on Video

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—On television as well as radio, the variety type show with plenty of laughs appears to be the fair-haired child with the public.

In fact, television programs, after an early preponderance of sports, are following the radio pattern in many respects with dramatic shows also getting a big play.

But the variety shows are particular standouts in television, with audience ratings unheard of for radio programs.

CBS, NBC, ABC and Dumont all have strong lineups of variety shows on their television networks.

NBC's other variety programs include the Paul Winchell-Dunninger, Russ Morgan and Girl About Town shows plus the Bob Smith program, which might be called semi-variety. The Winchell-Dunninger program is among the top five.

The CBS list also includes Mississippi Music Hall, the Face the Music program five times a week and Places Please three times a week.

Dumont's television version of "The Original Amateur Hour" is among the top five, and others include Doorway to Fame, Champagne and Orchids and the Jack Eigen Show.

ABC's variety offerings include the Gay Nineties, Three About Town and Club Seven.

NBC is adding a weekly revue starring Comedian Phil Silvers.

Color Music Eases Raveled Minds

By Ralph Dighton

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 4 (AP).—Into the darkened wards of asylums for the insane has come a new form of art, but its discoverers don't quite know what to do with it.

It is called "Auroratone," and the man guiding its development is Larry Crosby, who with his brother, Bing, heads the Crosby Research Foundation. It was invented by Cecil Stokes, an Englishman.

Auroratone is a process for translating music into color. Essentially, it is a motion picture. The theater lights are dimmed. You hear familiar music and on the screen flashes a series of color patterns, constantly shifting prismatic tones in every hue of the rainbow, subtly changing with the music.

Depending on the music, the effect can be relaxation, mental stimulation or emotional disturbance.

Simple Principle

THE PRINCIPLE is simple. The musical vibrations register on a sensitized emulsion photographed by a color movie camera. Each note creates a different color pattern in the emulsion. The color movie of these shifting changes is synchronized with the music.

"It is the answer," says Crosby, "to the age-old dream of providing the visual senses with an art form whose effect on the eyes is comparable to that of music on the ears."

In the Journal of Clinical Psychology for October 1946, Capt. Herbert E. Rubin of Crile General Hospital reported that "physical relaxation appeared to spread over the patients during the course of the film showing. Stereotyped motor phenomena such as wringing of hands, striking of parts of the body, and tics, became less intense or disappeared.

Six films were used in the study at Crile. They were "Claire de Lune," played by Andre Kostalanetz and his orchestra; "Going My Way," sung by Bing Crosby accompanied at the organ by Lt. Col. Edward Dunstedter, AAF; "The Lost Chord," organ solo; "Home on the Range," sung by Crosby with organ accompaniment; "I Dream of Jeanne With the Light Brown Hair," organ solo; and Schubert's "Ave Maria," sung by Crosby with organ accompaniment.

"Most patients," Rubin's report said, "became more accessible immediately following exposure to the films. Those whose speech was previously blocked or retarded, spoke more freely."

Tried at Hospitals

PRINTS of Auroratone films were loaned to military hospitals for experimental purposes.

Mrs. Marjorie Umbenhour, a registered nurse of Seattle, in charge of showing the films in several places in Seattle during November of 1944, made this report:

"Naval Hospital. Two hundred and fifty war fatigue and 31 locked-ward psychotics saw the film. Most of the fatigue cases responded very favorably, many going sound to sleep. Nearly all said they felt rested afterward.

"Locked Ward Showing. This was the most interesting and amazing demonstration of all. Of the 39 men in this ward, one-third of them went sound asleep. The rest were absolutely quiet as they watched the film. One man said, 'Why don't they give us more stuff like this?' "

Wants It to Pay

CROSBY is attempting to put Auroratone on a paying basis. The therapeutic experiments are expensive and unprofitable.

The foundation has found how to transfer Auroratone color patterns to textiles and ceramics. Silk scarves printed with visualizations of Bing singing "Home on the Range" have been manufactured, but are not yet on the market.

Some day you may eat breakfast from a set of dishes colored with strains from "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning." Or you may be able to send your rich uncle a handkerchief which is a color translation of "I'll Be Glad When You're Dead, You Rascal You."

Will Magic of Video Make Opera Popular With Public?

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, Dec. 4 (AP).—This week's first telecast of a performance of the Metropolitan raised but did not answer this question:

Will the magic of television make grand opera popular with the general public?

The event was historic not only because it was a "first," but also because the performance of Verdi's "Otello" was witnessed by more people than the staid old Metropolitan Opera House could seat in perhaps a decade of continuous daily presentations.

Some Drawbacks

WHILE the telecast had some obvious shortcomings—in common with most first-time events—the public reaction appeared to have been favorable and was pleasing to officials of the American Broadcasting Co. They estimated it was seen by "several hundred thousand" persons along the ABC East Coast Network, although it was not carried in Washington.

But a considerable portion of that audience was attracted by the novelty of the telecast. For tens of thousands, it was their first actual look at grand opera.

No decision has been made yet as to future telecasts from the Metropolitan, but it will take more to tell how much of a regular audience opera can attract through television.

ABC'S Saturday afternoon radio broadcasts of the Metropolitan opera—resumed yesterday for the current season—have shown slow but steady increases in listeners each succeeding year. But it appears to have been more a case of coming closer to the maximum of a limited, discriminating audience than creating any great numbers of new converts to grand opera.

New Fans

BUT SOME think the magic eye of television—enabling millions to see as well as hear the artists—may make many new opera fans. If it should, opera would assume a new and more important role in American entertainment, and would be not merely public service programming but good business as well for the sponsor.

A survey made by the Hooper audience measurement firm indicates most of those in New York who tuned to Monday night's telecast stayed with it to the finale.

The performance started with a Hooper rating of 42.3 and still had 41.3 at the end. This rating, incidentally, is topped by only three regular television programs reported in the last Hooper survey, and on the night of the telecast the opera drew more viewers than all other television shows on the air in New York.

Opera Stars Sing Blues These Days In Great Britain

London, Dec. 4 (AP).—British opera singers are singing the blues.

Two hundred of them from such houses as Covent Garden and Sadlers Wells got together to protest that foreigners are grabbing their jobs.

Two tenors raised their voices in front of a large supporting company called together by the British Actors Equity Association, a professional union.

Parry Jones complained that the Covent Garden national opera house "is doing a season in English with "Aida" played by an Austrian."

That sort of thing is especially bad, he said, since British taxpayers are subsidizing the house to the tune of more than $320,000 a year.

James Johnston said, "There are thousands of Mimis about the place." (Mimi is a French girl who dies in Puccini's "La Boheme.")

In unison, the singers decided to send a delegation to the Arts Council of Great Britain to kick about "the growing infiltration of foreign opera singers to the detriment of British artists."

In chorus, they voted to point out to the Prime Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the public's money is being spent at Covent Garden.

Radio in Review

What'll You Bid for a Comic?

By John Crosby

BUSINESS dealings in radio, an aspect generally left strictly alone in this column, have reached a state of hysteria that demand mention. For weeks Jack Benny has fluctuated, according to the trade press, between NBC and CBS, changing hands almost daily. Then CBS announced triumphantly that it had nailed Benny, who will start on CBS after 17 years on NBC, January 2 (same time—7 p. m. E. S. T. Sundays).

While CBS refuses to make any further statement, it is generally recognized in the industry that he was bought outright by CBS and extremely reliable sources place the purchase price at between two and three million dollars. Earlier this summer, the services of Freeman Gosden and Charles Correll, better known as Amos 'n' Andy, were purchased by CBS for an unnamed price of approximately two million dollars.

This is by no means all. CBS would like to buy Phil Harris and Edgar Bergen, too. Meanwhile, Coca-Cola has entered the lists in an attempt to procure Bergen in a deal which would give Bergen quite a lot of cash and also put him in the Coca-Cola business. The deal has not yet been consummated. Bing Crosby is now merchandising Minute Maid Orange Juice in return for a juicy block of stock. To get an entertainer these days, mere money doesn't talk. You need a block of stock and a tax lawyer.

WHILE the Amos 'n' Andy and Jack Benny deals sound like a form of luxurious white slavery, they aren't exactly that, at least legally. In both cases CBS acquired corporations, owned by the entertainers, rather than the entertainers themselves. However, the corporations without the brains and personalities of the entertainers are worth roughly the value of the office furniture, which is nowhere near two million dollars.

All these deals are, of course, tax dodges which would permit the comedians to pay capital gains taxes of 25 per cent in place of about 80 per cent in income taxes.

All this high finance has pretty well stunned the industry. Is any comedian worth two million dollars? Most of the comedians involved, both those who signed and those who are talking about it, are in their fifties and have been on the air for years. Besides television is coming in and there is no guarantee that Benny or Amos 'n' Andy or anyone else will repeat their success in that medium. As one executive remarked drily: "It looks as if CBS will be working for Jack Benny and Correll and Gosden for a long time to come."

"It's like buying Joe DiMaggio," one ad man commented. "He's a great player but you don't know whether he'll last out next season, much less 10 more seasons."

THE TAX angle has already aroused some concern in Washington, where Senator Bridges and Representative Priest of Tennessee have demanded investigations. Fred Allen, who has refused to discuss a similar deal, defends the comedians on this question, pointing out that: "You can deduct depreciation on your car but you can't save a dime on depreciation of your mind."

However, Allen admits that this form of raiding, which NBC, incidentally, started, is bad for the networks. "This is the greatest giveaway of all," says Allen, who has little use for giveaways. "Now they're giving away the networks. Instead of 'Stop the Music,' it's stop Paley." (William S. Paley, chairman of the board of CBS.)

Allen, who still insists he's going to quit at the end of the year, a claim he's been making for roughly 10 years, says he wouldn't want to sign up for 10 years with anyone. "My blood pressure is up again and I wouldn't want to die disappointing the tax department."

THESE MAMMOTH deals for talent are hard to understand from an economic standpoint—though that's CBS' worry, not mine—but they are also hard to justify from another viewpoint in which the listener is concerned. This sort of horse-trading will almost inevitably lead to a star system just as rigid and just as harmful as that of the motion picture industry.

Stars, which have cost so much money, must be used, must get the best time, the best billing, the best of everything whether their shows merit it or not, simply because they are so expensive. Names become more important than talent.

Competition among networks is a healthy thing for the listeners when it is confined to ideas. It is less edifying when the networks start raiding one another's personnel rosters. When NBC—which has done plenty of raiding too—lured "Ozzie and Harriet," Jimmy Durante, and a host of other expensive shows from CBS, the CBS answer was to build its own shows. In the case of "My Friend Irma" and the various Arthur Godfrey shows, it was conspicuously successful. With others, it wasn't. Nevertheless, all their efforts had freshness and originality which were welcome to listeners and it's heartening that Paley promises CBS will continue to develop its own new ideas despite the addition of some very old ones to its network.

IT'S RATHER odd that these huge deals are being made at a time when almost all advertisers are preparing to slash their radio budgets sharply next year. There will be precious few $20,000 to $25,000 a week budgeted shows which is what the big variety show of the Benny, Hope, Allen, Bergen type cost. Advertisers will even think a long time before sponsoring the $15,000 show such as "Duffy's Tavern."

Even this year, the highly priced guest stars—the $7500 or Al Jolson variety—have gone begging because they aren't worth it to the advertiser. One of the biggest ad agency men in radio recently predicted that within two years radio will consist of low-budgeted—$3000 to $5000—shows and music.

The reason is television. It will be five years probably before the television audience matches radio's but two other factors have already hastened the advertiser into the new medium—sponsor identification and sales pull.

The tickets are on sale at the arena. A grand prize of $5000 will be awarded to the winning amateur musician that night.

Waring Songfest to Help Speech-Defective Tots

Fred Waring makes a new friend. On December 21 at 10 a. m. on WRC Waring will broadcast a "sing-along" to aid this lad and other speech-handicapped children like him at the Institute of Logopedics, Kansas

A GREAT Christmas carol festival, with millions of voices expected to sing together, is planned on WRC at 10 a. m. December 21, when Fred Waring's Glee Club will stage a Nation-wide "sing-along."

The national sing-along is dedicated to speech-handicapped children unable to sing for themselves. Waring is inviting all Americans from coast to coast to help him "put a song into the hearts of the speechless" at Christmas time.

The plan, Waring says, is for choral groups, school children and families in their own schools, churches and homes to sing along with the Pennsylvanians.

The idea for the Christmas musical tribute to the speech-handicapped came to Waring, he says, when he and his organization gave a concert in Wichita, Kans., in November. At that time Fred visited the Institute of Logopedics—a nonprofit speech correction clinic—where hundreds of children with crippled tongues are being taught normal speech.

Waring then thought of using the voices of his glee club and recruiting a million other voices to salute the work of the institute as a means of focusing greater public attention on the needs of the speech-handicapped.

Founded in 1934, the Institute of Logopedics came into being because a young college professor, Dr. Martin F. Palmer, believed with Daniel Webster that speech is the most valuable of all human powers and that something should be done to aid the millions of speech-handicapped who are imprisoned in a world of silence.

Waring's program for the "sing-along" will include "Beautiful Savior," "Gesu Bambino," Medley—"Carol of the Bells," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," "The First Noel;" "God Rest Ye Merry Gentlemen," "Cantique de Noel," "'Twas the Night Before Christmas," "The Twelve Days of Christmas," "Jesus, Joy of Man's Endeavor."

Style Expert Has a Dilemma

Style Expert Adelaide Hawley faces a constant dilemma with her DuMont television show, "Fashions on Parade." Because it's presented in the evening while husbands are at home, she has to mix in enough entertainment to keep hubbies content to watch and not turn to something else. Women viewers demand more styles—the men more entertainment. Consequently, while "Fashions on Parade" is a style program, it also could qualify as a variety show.

The men also complicate the act on another score. Miss Hawley likes to keep the same models for succeeding shows, for they are easier to work with as they gain experience. The men want to see new faces. The answer, thinks Miss Hawley, is the girl who can act and model both.

"I wish," she says, "that more girls with acting ability would get their figures to model proportions, or girls with model figures would acquire acting ability."—(AP).

Voice of Firestone Is in Its 21st Year

New York, Dec. 4 (AP).—Another of network radio's old-time sponsored programs, the Monday night NBC concert now presenting Howard Barlow's orchestra, is observing its twentieth anniversary.

The sponsor (Firestone) started the series December 3, 1928, with the same format that maintains today—serious music interspersed with light classics, popular and nostalgic tunes.

National Tourney Opens in Florida

By Marian H. Barre

AT THE Winter Nationals, which open this afternoon in Miami Beach at the Roney-Plaza, few Washingtonians will be on hand for the curtain raiser, the national individual championship. Mrs. Breckinridge Long is one of the exceptions. The Steinberg-Stone duo go the latter part of the week for the ranking open pair event, so does Fred L. Karpin, who will play in the team championship also, he has not announced with whom. Mr. and Mrs. George Kathan will put their outstanding partnership record to the test in world masters mixed pairs.

Other Capitalites who made early reservations include Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Poissant, Mrs. Margaret L. Fisher, Mrs. A. J. Steinberg, Mrs. T. E. Turner, Mrs. Harold Young, C. C. Johnson, and Alfred Stidham. There are scores of last-minute entries.

FOR fans unable to go to Florida consolation may be found at home. There will be two master point games on Saturday, the Women's Auxiliary having advanced its bi-monthly benefit to December 4 at 1 p. m. in Euclid Studios, while the Chess Club meets that evening in Hotel Gordon. The annual mixed pair championship at Arlington Farms Club begins Friday evening, with finals scheduled on December 12 at 6:30 p. m.

All Virginia games are flourishing and another new one has been added to the schedule. The preliminary meeting was held last Thursday at 1701 Braddock rd. in Alexandria, "Jerry" Machlin directing. Parkfairfax and Fairlington players predominated. Machlin made his first appearance at the D. C. Tourney when he assisted "Uncle" Al Sobel.

They even run to 40-entry individuals in the Old Dominion. This number took part in the Arlington Farms round robin on November 26, when Lieut. Alvin Israel defeated Maj. Mario Cicconi. Charles Richter in third place made the best civilian showing.

Replacing members who have moved away, several new appointments in the Women's Auxiliary were announced by President Mrs. Howard Campbell at the meeting held in Hotel Roosevelt on November 27. Mrs. Paul Golden becomes first vice president for the unexpired term of Mrs. P. E. Henninger; Mrs. D. E. Stephan assumes the chairmanship of the membership committee, previously held by Mrs. Frederick Eberson, and Mrs. R. S. DuBois takes over Mrs. Jesse Gilbert's duties as head of the welfare committee. The latter group is one of the most active in the organization, being in charge of "Cause of the Month" donations. The Florence Crittenton Home and the Society for the Blind are the latest Auxiliary beneficiaries. Winners in the master point game which followed the meeting were Miss Virginia Kinnard-Mrs. Dixie Wright, Mrs. Margaret Cox-Mrs. C. E. Meissner, Mrs. M. L. Fisher-Mrs. Edna Evans, Mrs. DuBois-Mrs. S. H. Beasley.

THE auxiliary's annual toy collection for Children's Hospital was taken up at Washington Bridge League master point match on December 1, producing a whole carload of gaily wrapped packages for Santa to distribute among the little patients. League members who forgot to bring a gift made up for their negligence with cash contributions. The field that night was divided into three sections, with the following results:

In Section 1 there was a north-south tie between Mrs. H. G. Campbell-Mrs. Edward St. John, Mrs. Dora Schwartz-Ralph Spriter, Capt. and Mrs. J. L. Herlihy leading in the other position. In Section 2 the experts bowed to Mrs. Ruth Stevenson and Evalyn Reims, Mrs. Jesse Terry and L. V. Repke. Mrs. H. S. Klein and Miss Kathleen McNutt play better than they estimate, wagering they were "bottom" they surprised themselves by leading their section, which was won the other way by J. G. McDermoot and William Million.

Given in the same order, runners-up were Fred L. Karpin-Robert Jordon, Mrs. John Coffee-James Sourilas, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Salvatorel, Mrs. William Tidball-Col. E. B. Gray, Lewis Tubbs-J. G. Stone.

A change in schedule brings the monthly masters at the Count Club on Tuesday evening of this week instead of on the "second Tuesday."

Fans who increased their master point holdings at the Federal Bridge League's open pair game were Mrs. Rebecca Crane-Francis Drake, David Murray-Gary Ankoian, Mrs. Howard Surkin-Mrs. St. John, Dr. A. J. Steinberg-C. C. Johnson. Second-place awards going to W. A. Poissant-Lewis Tubbs, Col. R. Skinner-J. G. Stone, Dr. Gerald Wooley-Miller Roberts, Eric Morgan-R. H. Higgins.

Miss McNutt is the latest addition to the District group en route to Florida—latest subtraction are the Poissants, who were obliged to cancel their reservations.

New Rule Should Speed Delivery of Mail Orders

By William M. Stuart

A NEW rule adopted by the Philatelic Agency will undoubtedly speed delivery of mail orders. Rule 9 is added to sales list No. 242, dated November 22, 1948, and is as follows: "Requests for the use of specific issues to be used for return postage cannot be complied with."

Despite delay in filling orders, due primarily to clerical shortages in the Agency, much time has been spent in an effort to comply with requests for return postage. Some requests have been most unreasonable and frequently more time has been consumed in the above than in filling original orders.

Then, too, many of those receiving return orders with specified stamps have shown great dissatisfaction. Many collectors requested singles, pairs and even blocks, as well as a great variety of issues, thus causing the entire situation to become a detriment to the Agency service.

By the adoption of the new regulation requests for specific stamps will be ignored. This should not work a hardship on collectors, for after all it seems unnecessary that the Post Office Department should select specific items simply to please patrons. After all, speed in delivery of orders is the essential feature of the Agency and the new No. 9 regulation should be most effective.

THE NEW 4-cent air mail postal card will be placed on first day sale in Washington on January 10, 1949. The new card will be of the regular size postal card with a 4-cent stamp arranged horizontally in the upper right corner. The stamp will be printed in red on a cream colored card. First day cancelations will be given but limited to not more than 5 to a person, the Postmaster, Washington 13, D. C., serving cancelations.

The design, color and details of first day sales of the new 3-cent commemorative for the 200th anniversary of the founding of Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., on April 12, 1949, will be made known early in the new year. This will be the third stamp already on the 1949 stamp program.

To commemorate National Heroes' Day this year a special cachet and canceler was applied to all philatelic covers and souvenirs with at least a 2-centavo stamp of the current series at the Manila postoffice November 30.

The new postage and air mail stamps of Liberia, 16 in number, are now ready for distribution. The first of the series is a 1-cent value showing the first president, Joseph Jenkins Roberts, who served from 1848 to 1856 and from 1872 to 1876. This stamp is printed in green and black by the E. A. Wright Bank Note Co., of Philadelphia, Pa. All values of the series, with the exception of the 5-cent denomination will follow the style of the 1-cent stamp.

AT THE meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening, it was "boys night." Ellery Denison presided and greeted the visitors. Stamps were exhibited, discussed and under the guidance of Ernest Woodhouse all of the 30 boys present were generously treated with stamps, United States and foreign issues. From the Boys Club of Washington Elmer Hurdle, jr., the president, and Erwin Bonden Steiner, senior scout of Troop 100, of St. Johns Episcopal Church, Georgetown, were introduced to the meeting and extended greetings. At Tuesday's meeting in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw., there will be an auction.

The Woodridge Stamp Club will hold a "revival meeting" tomorrow evening at the recreation center, 1818 Rhode Island ave., ne. A surprise program will be given.

Salute to Crowninshield

Prints Are Up at National Gallery

By Jane Watson Crane

IF IT WERE not for the print department, the National Gallery would virtually have no special exhibitions. The current display of French prints and drawings has been arranged as a memorial to the late Frank Crowninshield, who was an avid art collector. While other works are included, by Bonnard, Vuillard, Maurice Denis and Matisse, the exhibition features the Crowninshield collection of prints, drawings and illustrated books by Andre Dunoyer de Segonzac, recently given to the National Gallery by his nieces and nephew.

Sent from Paris especially for the show are volumes of the recently published "Georgics" of Virgil, with illustrations by Segonzac. The artist worked on this task intermittently since 1930.

The book was to have been published by Vollard, who in his later years concentrated on getting the artists to do graphic work for him. Vollard died in 1939, and the volume was finally completed this year by the Imprimerie Nationale. Segonzac made his etchings for it in the south of France, getting his material from bucolic scenes in the countryside near St. Tropez.

A number of the Matisse lithographs included are also from the Crowninshield collection. When they were sold at auction, after his death, they were purchased by Lessing Rosenwald for the National Gallery.

Vuillard and Bonnard

THE exhibition gives an unusually good opportunity to see the graphic work of Vuillard, who died during the war, and of Bonnard, whose death occurred in 1947. Their colored lithographs go back as far as 1895. Vuillard's in particular resemble his later paintings.

Work by all of these men is well known in the United States. Two—Matisse and Bonnard—have become much more widely known during the past year, due to the publicity attendant on their big retrospective exhibitions.

We have always thought that the work of Segonzac resembled his name—easy flowing and suggestive of a distinguished origin. Segonzac, born some 20 years later than the above-named, is still living and working in Paris. We understand that the clouds of political suspicion which surrounded him during the war have recently lifted in the light of explanation. He has always had a fashionable following in this country. Mr. Crowninshield began to collect his work in the late twenties. In 1947 Segonzac wrote to him: "I believe that, except for my personal things, you have the most complete collection of my etchings. You were interested from the beginning and you have contributed truly in making me known in America."

Began in 1919

KNOWN primarily for his landscapes in oil, Segonzac began to etch in 1919, after serving in the First World War. All his work indicates a pleasant freedom in execution, discernible in the portrait sketches and book illustrations as well as in the landscapes. The Segonzac prints, unlike many of the others, are not in color, but color in any case is not his strong point.

The display, which is called "Paris, the Favorable Climate," will continue until the middle of January. It was assembled by Elizabeth Mongan and David Keppel of the National Gallery print department.

Serigraph is merely another name for this print process, the basic principle of which is nothing more or less than a stencil. One color is superimposed on another, one printing being required for each color. Adroit manipulation can change the effect achieved from that of thin water color to heavy impasto.

The National Serigraph Society, a nonprofit organization run by and for artists working in the medium, was founded eight years ago when silk screen was just beginning to be developed as a fine arts process, although it had been used commercially for some time. Serigraph prints are inexpensive. Their display at this season is well timed, for they make attractive Christmas presents.

Storm Brews Over Art Criticism in Yugoslavia

By Gaston Coblentz

BELGRADE, Dec. 4 (NYHT).

Ilya Ehrenburg, noted Soviet journalist and author, has been charged by the Yugoslav Writers Union with deviation from the proper Communist interpretation of works of art.

The writers' union attacked a Yugoslav literary monthly, Knjizhevnost, for publishing an article by Ehrenburg which contained views "with which leading Soviet critics and also our own do not agree."

In a tone which might be described as more Communist than the Kremlin, the writers' union made it clear that Soviet authors will get short shrift in Yugoslavia if departures from Marxism-Leninism are detected in their works.

"If a Soviet article is published here," said Knjizhevne Novine, the writer's union organ, "it must correspond to the theoretical positions and cultural-political line of Soviet culture."

The writers' union conceded that "some of Mr. Ehrenburg's works are highly praised in Soviet Russia," but found nothing good to say for the article in Knjizhevnost in which he "gave his impressions" of the recent international congress of intellectuals in Wroclaw, Poland.

Ehrenburg's article contained "certain views on formalistic literature and art and its creators, especially Picasso," which were "based on his own esthetic sympathies" rather than on current Marxist doctrine, the writers' union said.

". . . The politically progressive attitude of some writers and artists in the West does not excuse the decadent formalism of their works and even weakens the progressive social-political attitude that some of them have in public life," said the writers' union, in rebuking Ehrenburg for his account of the congress.

Observers were puzzled by the sharpness of the Yugoslav attack. A careful reading of Ehrenburg's article revealed that it contained no literary or art criticisms except for a brief mention that Pablo Picasso sent the congress a "nice drawing" of a Polish peasant girl.

(Ehrenburg is the Soviet's leading commentator on foreign affairs in such official government and Communist Party journals as Pravda and Izestia. His novel of the French underground, "The Storm," was awarded the Stalin prize for literature in April, and he was officially ranked as the seventh best writer in the USSR, according to the annual press day list issued May 7 in Moscow.)

Surrealism Took Its Lead From Poesy of Baudelaire

NEW YORK, (U.P.)—The poet and the artist who explore the depths of life cannot shun scenes of madness, perversion, sin, sickness, decay and death. Yet none can endure sights without being affected by melancholia and pessimism. Baudelaire who took stock of life, finished by believing that man is "an oasis of horror in a desert of boredom."

What Baudelaire did in poesy, surrealism and its sister movment, neo-romanticism, are doing at present in painting. Like him, they make their reports palatable by balancing their hideous contents against the beautiful form of their tales and by enveloping the strange scenes in a dreamlike atmosphere.

Neo-romantic Eugene Berman, whose show is at the Knoedler Galleries, has been attracted lately by Mexican motives—memories of his recent trip in that country. The sad melancholic, outlandish Mexican scenery—poor people living in the shadow of gorgeous ruins in the midst of an exotic landscape—is the paradise of neo-romanticism. Berman's colors are rich and warm, and his design has much of the French baroque's sophisticated elegance.

In the Downtown Gallery, Jack Levine, expressionist, lashes out at hypocrisy and social injustice. Two of his recent paintings, "Apteka" and "Royal Family," differ, however, from the rest. The former is a seminaturalistic street scene, the latter could best be called an expressionistic oil of an imaginary church glass-painting. The colors of the pictures have a deep sonority. The 33-year-old painter certainly has matured considerably since his last one-man show in 1942.

Kokoschka Exhibit Opens Today at Phillips

THE retrospective loan exhibition of paintings by the great Austrian-born artist, Oskar Kokoschka, opens this afternoon at the Phillips Memorial Gallery and will run through January 17.

A loan exhibition of master drawings for each of his 70 years was the surprise birthday celebration accorded to Paul Sachs at the Fogg Museum, Harvard University. Sachs, who is now emeritus professor of fine arts at Harvard, was a director of the Fogg for almost 30 years. Under his tutelage has emerged almost an entire generation of art museum directors in this country. Arranged by Agnes Mongan, curator of drawings, the party at the Fogg was attended by nearly 300 of Sachs' friends, associates, and former pupils. The show, which will be on public exhibition for six weeks, includes European fourteenth to nineteenth century drawings from museums, galleries, and private collections, some of which have never been on loan for display before.

The Trans-Lux Theater at 14th st. near New York ave. has started a series of monthly art exhibits in the lounge. The first of these consists of work by the following Washington artists: Richard Lahey, Clare Fontanini, Omar Carrington, Andrea Pietro Zerega, Jessalee Sickman, John Gernand and Ethel Robertson Gath.

An all-artist jury composed of William Zorach, chairman; Joseph Hirsch and Sol Wilson chose 79 works in oil, tempera, and sculpture for display in the thirty-fifth annual Delaware show at the Wilmington Society of Fine Arts. Three equal prizes of $100 each were offered by Ellen Wheelwright, a leader in the community who works in sculpture, with the stipulation that each juror make an award for his first choice. Winners were Charles M. West, jr., Anne Warner West, and Edward Loper, who has exhibited in group shows in Washington.

Portrait sketches in oil of several Washington residents were included in the exhibition of paintings and drawings by Atanas Tasev, an experienced European artist now living in the District. The display revealed throughout highly competent professional work in the European academic tradition.

The annual exhibition of works by members of the Landscape Club of Washington will open at the Arts Club on Sunday afternoon, December 19. The Landscape Club is one of the few remaining all-masculine art organizations; founded in 1913, it is an informal group featuring outdoor painting in and around Washington. Trips for painting further afield are organized from time to time.

By popular request there will be a rebroadcast over WCFM this afternoon at 5 of the on-the-spot discussion of the Corcoran Artists of Washington and Vicinity Show which was a feature of the opening.

Rhoda Low will hold an exhibition of her water colors, ink washes and drawings at the Women's National Democratic Club, 1526 New Hampshire ave. nw., on Wednesday afternoon. Fifty per cent of the proceeds from sales will be given to the Thrift Shop. Scenes of Washington will be included in a display which reflects the interests and travels of the artist.

New oceanfront hotels go up on Collins ave. in Miami Beach, Fla., as the Miami area gets ready for another busy winter season

Wary Florida Is Ready to Welcome Snow-Dodgers

By James F. Fowler

MIAMI, Dec. 4 (AP).—Florida's stanchest ally—Old Man Winter—is gathering his forces north of the Mason-Dixon line. The Sunshine State is preening for its annual influx of snow-dodgers.

For the next five months out-of-Staters will be reverently referred to as "our Northern friends" instead of just tourists.

The pleasant (and profitable) task of entertaining more than a million winter guests has been made easier this year by a good healthy beginning.

Already Florida has played host to nearly 100,000 Legionnaires and their families, another 6000 postmen and 15,000 or 20,000 conventioneers during the summer months.

But the main event—and the 120-day horse racing season—began December 1 when Tropical Park sent the first batch of thoroughbreds around its palm lined oval.

Hotel men, merchants, horse and dog track owners and night club operators aren't kidding themselves into believing the "season" will be anything like the golden era between 1944-46.

It will be a good season, they predict, but no bonanza.

There are several concrete reasons for their attitude. They point to the high cost of living; that it now takes most of the family income just for food, clothing and sending the kids to school. The gala postwar "let 'er rip" spending spree has been supplanted by a conservatism born of a certain amount of war jitters. There is apprehension, too, that the long-awaited peak in high prices may not be far away and things may suddenly begin to tumble in the other direction.

But Miami merchants are by no means pessimistic about the coming season, just cautious. In 1944-45 and 1945-46 Miami experienced a golden flow of spending never before seen in Florida's history. Last year the handwriting appeared on the wall. This year it's there in block letters.

All three race tracks—Hialeah, Gulfstream and Tropical Park—expect drops in parimutuel handles. Already theaters report less business and night clubs aren't signing high-priced talent so early in the game. They are waiting to see what kind of a mood the visitor brings down from the land of snow and sleet.

But Miami merchants, like football coaches, are inclined to be overly glum before the season starts.

To offset the gloomy aspects, work is being rushed on more than a half dozen luxury hotels on the ocean front. The three horse ovals are preened and pruned for the inevitable throngs attempting to outguess the horses.

The area's 330 tourist hotels, many of which opened for the American Legion convention in mid-October, are getting final scrubdowns.

Already Ohio, Illinois, New York and Pennsylvania license plates can be seen in downtown Miami. Railroads report reservations—particularly for January and February—are pouring in fast. Airlines plan special flights and the railways will put on extra season specials to handle the crowds.

Everglades Park Now In Most Critical Phase

By John O'Reilly

New York Herald Tribune News Service

HOMESTEAD, Fla., Dec. 4.—The Everglades National Park, twenty-eighth to be created and exceeded in size only by Yellowstone Park and McKinley National Park, in Alaska, is passing through its most critical phase. This is the period during which the rest of the land must be acquired, a master plan of development must be worked out and personnel and equipment must be provided. Also the work of protecting and preserving the area has hardly begun.

To realize the immensity of this task, a conception of the wildness, size and inaccessibility of this region must be obtained. To date the National Park Service has acquired 566,320 acres of land for Everglades Park.

To acquire the land, the State of Florida put up two million dollars, the largest contribution that a State has ever made toward the creation of a national park. But to speak of the park in terms of acres and dollars gives no adequate impression of the area itself.

The Tip of Florida

THE park comprises the bulk of the southern tip of the Florida peninsula south of the Tamiami Trail, but excluding the inhabited regions along the East Coast south of Miami. At the southwest corner of the park is Cape Sable with its 14 miles of shell-strewn beach, its flat praries and Lake Ingraham. Just north of the Cape lies Whitewater Bay with its myriad mangrove islands. North of that a series of rivers twist through the mangrove swamps to the Gulf of Mexico. Here stand some of the world's most impressive mangrove forests, with trees more than 80 feet in height.

Back of the giant mangrove forests the mangroves become smaller until sawmill prairies begin to appear. Back of that is the immense sweep of the Everglades, endless praries, inundated during much of the year and dotted with hummocks, small islands upon which palms and tangled vegetation grow.

To the north the park reaches into the Big Cypress, a region where cypress swamps replace the flooded praires. To the south the park will eventually include Florida Bay, with hundreds of uninhabited mangrove keys. Now this section is controlled by the Federal Government as the Everglades National Wildlife Refuge.

Facilities Lacking

AT PRESENT Everglades Park does not have the facilities for handling visitors that exist in established national parks. One road reaches into this huge area and it becomes progressively worse as it reaches across the Everglades and out onto Cape Sable. But on a trip down that single road the visitor will see more strange birdlife and curious tropical vegetation than he will on any comparable stretch of road in the country.

Improved facilities to handle visitors will not be put into effect until all the land has been acquired and the master plan for the park formulated.

Until then visitors will have to be content with meager facilities. Information may be obtained at ranger stations in the park, but access to many sections is difficult except through obtaining trained boatsmen who know the mangrove mazes.

Tours Operated

THE NATIONAL AUDUBON SOCIETY is helping out by operating one-and-two-day wildlife tours in the park, which must be booked in advance through the society's office in Miami.

Supt. Daniel B. Beard has a staff of one chief ranger, five rangers, one park naturalist, four clerical workers, one mechanic and an assistant mechanic. In winter, the season for the greatest number of visitors, additional rangers are added. Last winter 22,000 persons visited the infant park.

Beard explained that their most important job is not only preservation but also restoration of the natural features of the park. This region has long been wild in more than one respect. In the past various factions have struggled over the control of the water that drains southward over these prairies. Systems of canals were dug. Excessive dryness resulted and great fires which burned not only vegetable but peaty soil as well, swept the Everglades.

Fight for Bird Life

IT WAS in the area of what is now that park that the National Audubon Society, Federal agencies and other organizations fought for more than 50 years to preserve wild birds. Men were killed in this struggle and the battle continued up to the time of the establishment of the park. Now thousands upon thousands of birds feed in the Everglades and raise their young in great rookeries in the mangroves. In this respect the park is in good shape.

At a remote point on Cape Sable there stands a tombstone marking the grave of Guy M. Bradley, Audubon warden who was murdered by plume hunters in 1905 while trying to protect the birds. It is also a monument to all the others who shared in the half-century struggle. And now it becomes a reminder of the great responsibilities that Beard and his rangers have shouldered in taking over the administration and protection of this wild bit of America.

Whistle Stopping

Winter Bookings Going Up

By Orval Hopkins

THERE are ifs, althoughs and buts about the winter resort booking situation and I'm standing by for albeits and nonetheless. Polly Noyes, for instance, of the William P. Wolfe organization, takes a comfy seat on the fence and says, "A number of Eastern resorts are already heavily booked for the holiday season, although some space is still available." She goes on to mention—and it ain't sotto voce—the Mittersill Club, Franconia, N. H.; the Lodge at Smuggler's Notch, Stowe, Vt.; Split Rock Lodge at Lake Harmony, Pa., and some Laurentian resorts like Mont Gabriel and Ste. Alele Lodge.

The Laurentians seem to have come up, so here's one that says, "Great Downhill Planned in St. Donat, Quebec." It says, among other things, that a Montreal lawyer named George Fusey built a big resort up there "just for fun," probably as unlikely a reason as you'll encounter. Anyhow, he calls it Jasper in Quebec and one of its attributes is Sunset Mountain which has a new downhill ski course dropping 1260 feet in a run of only 2560 feet. My shushing friends tell me that's really steaming. The Canadian ski instructors, incidentally, are holding their annual eight-day instructors' school at St. Donat and Jasper now. It ends next Friday. This note winds up with a confident "Indeed St. Donat district is obviously tabbed as the coming development among ski areas of the beautiful Province of Quebec."

MEXICO seems to have things in hand for the winter season, too. The Mexican Tourist Association (with headquarters in Chicago) takes a quick look over its shoulder and notes that 230,000 Americans have vacationed in Mexico during the past 10 months, then gets that satisfied smile on with the happy estimate that "320,000 will have spent 75 million dollars in the neighbor republic" by the end of 1948. Free travel movies, art exhibits and highway and travel information are given at a center called the House of the Tourist, Avenida Juarez 89, which I take to be in Mexico City, not Chicago, though it doesn't say here. "Fresh travel areas," it does say, "now serviced by fine hotels and transportation are bidding for the tourist dollar. One such is the magnificent colonial city of Quanajuato, together with a necklace of other charming and historic cities like Queretaro, San Miguel Allende, Leon and Celaya." I love those Spanish names, no foolin'. You oughta hear me roll those r's.

ENTRIES are being received by the thousands for the American Bowling Congress, which will be held in Atlantic City in February, according to Lou (Strike) Cunningham of the wayward press. Lou says the ABC prize list will total nearly 500 G's this time . . Dr. Oscar Baudisch of the Saratoga Springs Authority (N. Y.) will speak before students and faculty of Colgate University at Hamilton on Tuesday. His talk is entitled "Biological Significance of Trace Elements." I haven't the mistiest idea of what trace elements are, but I understand they have to do with the therapeutic properties of mineral waters . . . The Pioneer Valley Association of Northampton, Mass., says that a full color motion picture with sound (16 mm.) showing several of the Pioneer Valley ski centers and also the Massachusetts Ski Jumping contest of 1947 is available without charge to adult group of more than 50. It can be obtained by writing the Pioneer Valley Association . . . As that white seal of Kipling's once said, "You ain't lived till you been around the Horn, Jack" (I didn't catch his exact words, but it went something like that). So Thos. Cook & Son announces two 'round South America cruises for this—I do declare, they don't go around the Horn at all. But they look like fine trips, anyway. You fly to Bermuda from New York on January 22, board the good ship Reina del Pacifico, cruise through the Caribbean and the canal, and down the west coast to Valparaiso, where you leave the ship. The return is via the east coast cities of Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Sao Paulo, Santos and Rio, flying homeward by Pan American World Airways to reach New York on March 12. Looks like nice work.

Georgia's Parks Attract Motorists

Although most of the State parks in north Georgia, including famous Vogel, have closed for the winter, thousands of Sunday autoists are taking advantage of fine December weather to make extended motor tours into the mountains. Parks still playing host to numerous picknickers and sightseers are Vogel at Blairsville, Amicalola Falls near Dawsonville, Fort Mountain at Chatsworth and Cloudland Canyon in Dade County. All of these parks contain beautiful mountain scenery.

Innkeeper's Pencils Stick to His Guests

By Sanky Trimble

TAOS, N. M., Dec. 4 (AP).—Never let it be said David Alvord doesn't enjoy life. Alvord gets fun out of driving people half looney with a pencil and placating them by thumbtack banking of their extra dollar bills.

Alvord, portly hotel operator, fastens a trick pencil with a loop of string into his guests' buttonholes and then defies them to remove the gadget.

Printing on the pencil says if you can't remove it, you must cut the buttonhole—"for it is seven years bad luck to burn, cut or break the pencil or string."

Alvord estimates he has hung 10,000 of the gadgets and those honored have spent hours, days and weeks trying to remove the pencil.

One fellow called long distance from Denver and talked 30 minutes getting instructions as to how to get it off. He was so relieved to rid himself of the object he sent Alvord a pair of boots. Another wired from Chicago asking the solution.

A couple from Stockholm, Sweden, walked in recently and asked if "this is the place with the pencils?" They'd heard about it from Stockholm neighbors.

And a well known cartoonist sent his coat back from Hollywood with a plea that Alvord remove the pencil. Alvord did—but looped pencils in all the other buttonholes.

The Taos host gets almost as much fun out of his thumbtack banking.

It all started a year ago when a Wichita, Kans., resident wrote his name on a dollar bill and asked Alvord to pin it up behind the bar—in case he should ever come in with a flat wallet and need a drink.

The idea grew. Just like a checking account, people said. Now there are approximately 100 dollar bills with names and addresses dangling in profusion from thumbtacks back of the bar.

Gold Rush Days Steamer Marks 50th Birthday

VANCOUVER, B. C., Dec. 4.—The sternwheeler Minto, built in Toronto in 1898 with a sistership Moyie, celebrated a fiftieth anniversary recently by making her regular trip on the picturesque, mountain-girt Arrow Lakes.

The Arrow Lakes actually are a widening of the Columbia River between Revelstoke, on the Canadian Pacific's main line to the Pacific Coast, and Robson West on its alternate Crow's Nest Pass-Kettle Valley route across the rich mining and fruit farming areas of southern British Columbia.

The Minto and Moyie were built for rivers of the Yukon following the great Gold Rush of 1898, but the gold rush slackened while they were on the ways, and the hulls were diverted to the Kootenay district of southeastern British Columbia where another and more significant mining boom, in base metals, giving birth to such world-wide enterprises as Consolidated Mining & Smelting Co., was in full swing.

The Minto was assigned to the Arrow Lakes and the Moyie, now in government service, to Kootenay Lake, farther east.

Both steamers bridged gaps in the then rapidly-building rail network of interior British Columbia, bringing transportation to farming and mining communities which otherwise would have been isolated.

Swiss Ski Teachers Meet in St. Moritz

St. Moritz, Dec. 4.—Ski experts who manage the Swiss ski schools at leading Alpine winter centers are attending the annual pre-season training course in the Suvretta area just outside this famous resort from November 28th until December 12th. As in former years, a model ski school will be part of the course. Its principal aim is to standardize teaching in accordance with Swiss skiing technique. Approximately 120 instructors will attend.

The Washington Post

December 5, 1948

MARCELINE HARVEY, telephone operator: "The turning point in my life to date was my graduation from Jefferson High School and the decision to get a job that would lead to a satisfactory career. Being a telephone operator has changed my entire attitude and character. I met a lot of different types and I have learned to get along with them. As a working girl, my parents give me more freedom."

FRANK O'NEILL, locomotive engineer: "My folks lived on a farm near Yankton, S.D., near the railroad tracks and I used to watch the trains go by. I decided running a train was the job for me. In 1899 when I was 15, I started working in the Great Northern roundhouse at Wilmer, Minn. After three years as a fireman, I became an engineer and have been one ever since. I wouldn't want to be anything else."

MRS. JOHN L. ROSS, salesgirl: "The Army changed my whole outlook on life. I thought the life I was leading while modeling in New York was the way everyone lived. But, when I became a Wac in 1944 I began to find out how the other half lived. The two years I spent in the service taught me to see the other person's point of view, and as a result I am now more settled in my ways and attitudes."

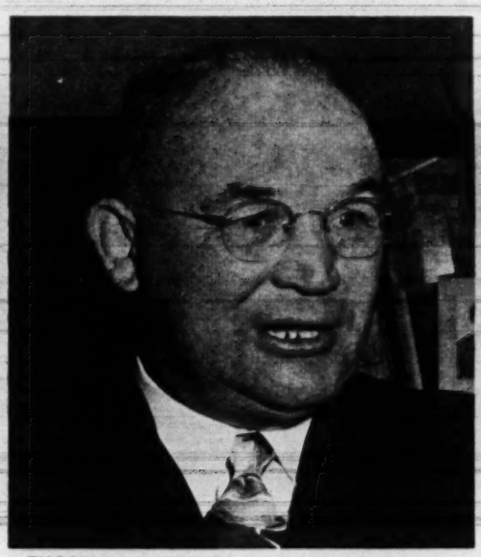
The Turning Point

Careers Hinge on Minor Events

THE LIVES OF MOST PERSONS at some time have been profoundly affected by a chance remark, a bit of philosophy passed on from one to another, an incident that seemingly had little import or a premeditated program that failed to come off according to schedule. It may come early in life or very late; many people, embarked on what they considered to be stable careers, have seen an odd word or a chance happening change everything and send them off on altogether different careers.

On this page PARADE presents highlights in the lives of six average persons, residents of St. Paul, Minn. They do not differ considerably from the experiences of most of us.

The recital of such turning points are of more than passing interest to the average person. We enjoy reading about what has happened to others and the consequence of such happenings. Accordingly, PARADE next week will begin a new series of personality sketches which will relate turning points in the lives of men and women who are frequently and prominently mentioned in the news.



THOMAS J. GIBBONS, Sheriff of Ramsay County: "I know the exact day and reason for the turning point in my life. It was June 25, 1925, the day I fought Gene Tunney in New York. This was my 105th fight, and I decided it was time to quit before I became hurt like so many fighters. I went into the insurance business, then became sheriff. I never regret leaving the fight game when I did."

MRS. WILLIAM LEHMANN, businesswoman: "A pickled mushroom was the turning point in my life. I've been in the mushroom business for 43 years and all that time what to do with the surplus, that is, those mushrooms that the market couldn't absorb, was a terrific problem. Last August, I hit upon the idea of using an old French recipe for pickling them, and now the problem of my spoiled surplus is gone."

ANDREW J. KOCH, taxicab operator: "The turning point in my life was when I went into the Army. Discharged as a sergeant, I found out that I could be a leader, and now I'm vice-commander of my local Legion Post. Although I learned a new trade in the Army, I decided that driving a taxi, which I had done before, offered a better living. My time in the Army made me much more satisfied with life." THE END.

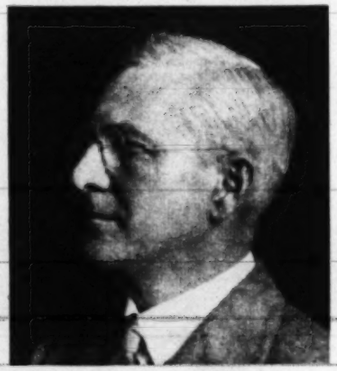
Dr. Arnold Lucius Gesell

"Every child travels by his own tailor-made schedule."

ONE OF THE WORLD'S most prominent authorities in the field of child behavior and author of two dozen important volumes on child psychology, Dr. Arnold Lucius Gesell knows most children better than do their parents. By the same token, children are his best friends. For more than 20 years head of Yale University's Clinic of Child Development (he retired last July as the active director), he has looked, listened, and charted while thousands of unsuspecting children slept, ate, talked, learned and played. Though Dr. Gesell has retired as head of the Clinic, he is continuing his research at the University in charge of a Child Vision Research Project.



Children are his best friends . . .

Dr. Gesell's first interest at the Yale Clinic was in the study of backward children, but, as time went on, he altered the course of his interest. While dealing with abnormal children it seemed to him that the age at which abnormality might better be discovered and diagnosed could be pushed farther back, even to babyhood. As a result, he became a pioneer in studying the mental growth of babies—from the time they were born until the time they went to school.

As he studied the "pre-school" abnormal child he became convinced that unless more was known about the mind of the normal infant and child, it would not be possible to deal adequately with the abnormal. He found that his original interest in the mentality of abnormal school children had been changed into an ever-increasing interest in the mental development of the normal infant.

Since tools and techniques were lacking, Dr. Gesell had to work out an original system of observing and measuring infant behavior. His chief work has been to show that the mental growth of the child reveals itself "in consistent and characteristic behavior patterns, governed by laws of growth similar to those which control the development of his body." Thus, he works with children not in terms of psychology alone, but in terms of physiology and medicine, too.

Dr. Gesell's main instrument in the Child Development Clinic and in the "Guidance Nursery" which was added in 1926 is the motion picture camera. The camera to him is an instrument by which infant behavior patterns can be charted, for it captures behavior in its totality; "it crystalizes any given moment of behavior in its visible entirety," and it records the developmental cycle. As the infants and children play, eat, wash, dress, sleep, they are under constant observation. By means of an ingenious screen device they are watched without their knowledge and pictures are made on every phase of their activity. Dr. Gesell considers the collection of pictures as perhaps the most significant achievement of the Clinic.

His most recent book, "The Child From Five to Ten," is a composite picture of 50 children of "above-average" intelligence from "comfortably-fixed" families. As a result of this study Dr. Gesell counsels that "Every child has an individual pattern of growth, unique to him . . . He travels by his own tailor-made time schedule."

Like a lot of American youngsters four-year-old Bobby Garvey is a firm believer in Santa Claus. So when a local radio station in his hometown of Manchester, N. H., started a program from the "North Pole," Bobby nightly was glued to the radio set.

Patiently, he heard the commercials, for he was certain that old St. Nick would surely read the letter Bobby had carefully dictated to his mother detailing the things he expected for Christmas. Dejectedly he listened, but none of the letters was his.

After many fruitless nights, Bobby was about to give up hope. "I'll give it just one more chance tonight," he told himself. "Then I won't listen any more." The program was rapidly drawing to a close when Santa's words took on a familiar sound.

"Hello, Bobby Garvey," boomed Santa's hearty voice. "He didn't forget me," smiled Bobby while he listened triumphantly to a reading of his letter to the North Pole. As a hidden photographer recorded all his reactions, Bobby's happiness was complete.

Where is Low-Cost Meat?

High prices and shortages plague the nation's households

LATE LAST AUGUST THOUSANDS OF meat-hungry, pocket-poor U.S. housewives staged a brief and bitter demonstration. Fed up with meat bills that had climbed 25 per cent in a year and nearly 200 per cent in six, they struck against their butchers.

Their boycott was un-coordinated and futile. A few butchers closed down and a few more peeled a couple of cents from their prices. But within a day or two the shops were reopened, prices were racing skyward again, and all that was left for the housewives was their tenacious conviction that something should be done about meat.

To date, American women haven't changed their minds. "What's wrong?" they are asking. "Who's to blame?"

Prying for an answer, the nation's butchers, meat packers, ranchers, farm experts and economists disagree. Some say there is no real meat shortage at all, that the public is simply consuming more meat than ever before. Others hold that there are basic livestock shortages and that prices therefore won't drop until the shortages are relieved. And many claim that because of her extended demands for meat, the housewife is herself to blame for prices which already have made meat an un-buyable luxury on many American tables.

Although the nation's butchers have learned the fury of a housewife scorned, few of them will accept the guilty verdict. "Hey," a retail meat dealer recently complained, "leave the butcher alone. Why, we couldn't create a meat shortage if we wanted to. We're in business only when we have meat. Go to the packer with your troubles. He's the man who sets the price pattern for us."

But leaders in the meat packing industry place the blame elsewhere. They admit that meat prices have reached the highest level in history but they claim the housewife alone is responsible. With high wages and full employment having jacked the national income to thrice its pre-war level the consumer has constantly bid up the price of meat, the industry claims. As a result, the average American this year is eating his way through 145 pounds of beefsteak, pork tenderloin, lamb chops and hot pastrami sandwiches—more than ever before. And yet, the meat packers add, he arises from his table each night profoundly displeased because the commodity he has so persistently demanded has cost him so much.

Some cattlemen, too, seem to have little sympathy for the average consumer whom they envision as a fat-and bloated gourmand, bristling with greenbacks and greed who, from his skyscraper apartment in New York, seems determined to deplete and destroy the great beef herds in the West.

"Right now," a prominent meat-grower remarked, "we have a limited cattle population that is greatly surpassed by the public's demand for more meat. I wish the public would get wise to this fact."

The consumer eyes this argument skeptically. In his distorted mirror he sees the packers, allied with hog and cattle raisers, waging war against his purse.

Between these extremes, the housewife feels caught in a vice as she makes her shopping rounds, patiently waiting for meat prices to come down to her level.

Feed crops influence meat production

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE Charles F. Brannan believes there are two ways to bring meat pirces down. First, he suggests a return of price controls. But if controls remain off he sees increased production of livestock as the consumer's only hope.

"There's no mystery about the high price of meat," says Brannan. "It's due to the premature death of O. P. A. It beats me how anyone ever sold to the American people the idea that we had to scuttle price controls to bring prices down to reasonable levels. In the two years since that propaganda was successfully peddled throughout the country retail meat prices have more than doubled."

Unless we get price controls back Brannan believes that the only remedy for unreasonable meat prices is more livestock on the hoof. In this belief he is joined by the American Meat Institute which holds that with the production of 14 pounds of stock feed this year for every 10 pounds produced last year the outlook for more meat is promising.

For the harried housewife whose food budget has been staggered by meat prices as well as for the local butcher, long pinched by consumer resistance, stepped-up livestock production may indeed spell salvation. For if inflation's back is to be broken, production alone will wield the axe.

Prospects, both the government and the meat packers agree, are encouraging. Recently, the Agriculture Department predicted that 1948's corn crop would be the largest on record, and more corn means more and fatter cattle and hogs.

According to Agriculture figures, the present short supply goes back to the war years. Then, the armed service's high meat ration, sudden high civilian demands and soaring grain prices gradually depleted herds. But today's record feed crops will enable cattle and hog men to buy feed cheap and thus run little risk in breeding a new backlog of animals. Corn, in particular, is plentiful and inexpensive, and when corn is cheap cattlemen breed.

Government meat inspection is made before and after the slaughtering. The meat grader stamps quality on carcass.

Cattlemen, like most American businessmen, subscribe to the ancient economic law of supply and demand. And when the housewife's demand for meat exceeds the livestock demand, prices go up. But with feed cheap, on-the-hoof breeding increases and meat supplies gradually multiply, bringing prices down.

Actually, the charge that the housewife herself is in a major way responsible for inflation in meat is not wholly inaccurate. Although other factors must be considered, it is true that consumers have always been the final arbiters of meat prices. If the asking prices on any food commodity are higher than the consumers are willing to pay, the supplies will pile up on store shelves and stay there until prices come down. Cattlemen, meat packers and butchers know this, but thus far buyer resistance has not been strong enough to dent the price of sirloin steaks.

Unless she strengthens her will power, then, the housewife will have to wait for a meat production increase before meat prices fall. However, because it takes time to convert feed into meat, this year's huge corn crop probably won't turn into pork chops or prime ribs of beef until the fall of 1949. Moreover, the Meat Institute predicts that veal and lamb production in 1949 and 1950 may be even smaller than this year with no appreciable relief in prices for these products in sight for three years. For even when a grain surplus exists, the period from breeding to slaughter averages about three years for a steer and a little less than a year for a hog.

The newborn calf, for instance, feeds off its mother during the first four months. Then, sometime after the fourth month, it is separated from the cow and gradually fed portions of grass, hay and highly concentrated protein feed. The daily diet of an older animal usually requires more than 16 pounds of feed—and almost as much care as you would lavish on a growing child. For unlike coconuts and grapefruit, meat won't grow on trees.

Economists, moving into the meat picture, have a final caution for housewives. Don't expect prices to topple to pre-war levels, they warn, because our economy today has been pitched at a much higher level of income and expenditure. Pre-war meat prices have become as much a part of the past as pre-war automobile, washing machine and candy-bar prices. Those days apparently are gone forever but the consumer, nostalgically looking backward to more casual and less complicated times, can't seem to forget that in 1939 pork chops cost him less than 35 cents a pound.

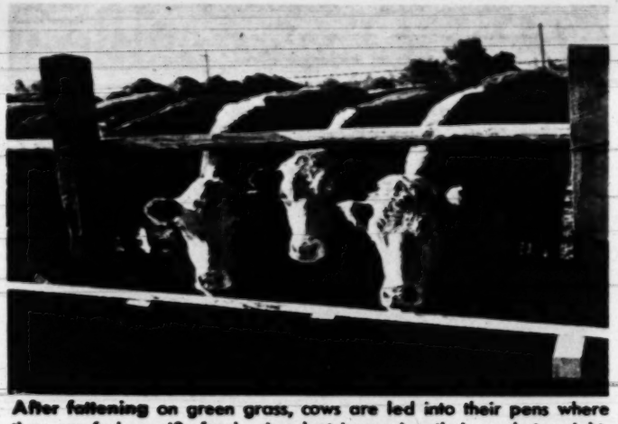
New meat levels, when they come, should settle somewhere above 1946 tops and, barring either an extreme deflationary economic upheaval or another inflationary wave, should stay there, governed again by actual consumer demands.

Cattlemen, meat packers and government officials are agreed today that more meat is on the way. But it will take time to complete the long trip from the Corn Belt and the Great Plains to the dinner table in Washington or Bridgeport. And the payoff in pork chops probably won't actually come until late next year.

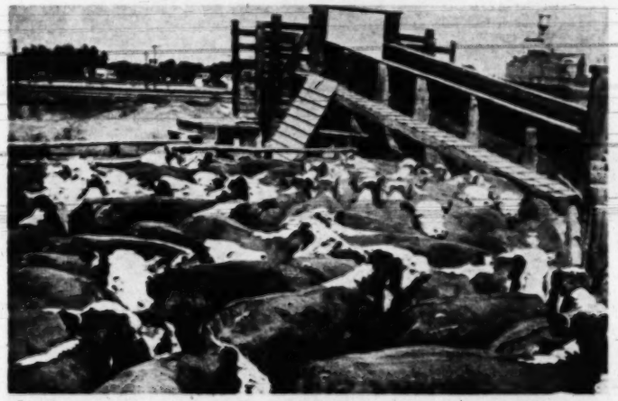
Protesting high meat prices, housewives have picketed butcher shops, but sales dwindled slightly.

Released from its pen, this cow is being directed to branding and vaccinating area. Ranch brand identifies animal all through life.

Huge bales of hay are placed at strategic spots near feed lots. Hay serves as roughage which is an important part of the animal's diet.



After fattening on green grass, cows are led into their pens where they are fed specific foods aimed at increasing their market weight.



Cattle are herded into sorting area. Here, decisions are made as to which animals are ready for market, which need more fattening. THE END.

Peggy Diggins' smile wins her a story-book career!

Peggy Diggins, Beauty Director at famed John Robert Powers School, attracts glamorous assignments wherever she goes. Peggy's charming smile was first spotted by a famous columnist, who launched her on a promising movie career.

Then the war began, and Peggy left Hollywood to join the WAC. Soon she was back in the limelight as a war correspondent, traveling in London's most exclusive circles, and meeting world-famous leaders. Now marriage and motherhood keep Peggy close to New York. And her students at Powers School see a shining example in her winning smile. It's a Pepsodent Smile! Peggy says, "Using Pepsodent is part of my beauty routine."

ANOTHER FINE LEVER BROTHERS PRODUCT

The smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile!

Peggy Diggins knows it. And people all over America agree—the smile that wins is the Pepsodent Smile! They've seen how Pepsodent removes the film that makes teeth look dull—uncovers new brightness in their smiles!

Wins 3 to 1 over any other tooth paste—in recent tests, families from coast to coast were asked to compare delicious New Pepsodent with the tooth paste they were using at home. By an overwhelming majority . . . by an average of 3 to 1 . . . they said New Pepsodent tastes better, makes breath cleaner and teeth brighter than any other tooth paste they tried. For the safety of your smile use Pepsodent twice a day—see your dentist twice a year!

Nervously gnawing a safety pin, the pride of Ridgefield passes exacting diaper-changing test.

Baby's bath requires steady nerves, quick footwork. Police learn how in a special baby course.

Three-Cornered Beat

Diaper duty doesn't frighten these well-schooled cops

ON A RECENT AFTERNOON a Ridgefield, N. J., mother, burdened with a bag of groceries and a loudly protesting infant son, was halted on Main Street by a burly cop.

"Why, Mrs. Mulvaney," boomed the Law, "what's wrong with little Chester?"

"Oh, Sergeant," the distraught mother cried, "it's the colic."

The sergeant nodded sympathetically and, bending over the infant, chucked it discreetly under the chin. Then rearranging his craggy features into what he imagined to be an engaging smile, he began to speak.

"Googilly, woogilly, woo," he cooed. "Is a little feller got a nassy, wassy colic?"

Petrified with horror by the sergeant's frightful grimace and stunned into silence by the strange language he spoke, little Chester immediately stopped crying and went to sleep.

That his mother, like other Ridgefield mothers, has recently found new respect for the law can be attributed to a program inaugurated by Police Chief Walter Gallagher which requires all men on the force to learn how to deliver and care for a baby.

To implement this training, Chief Gallagher has hired a practical nurse. In a series of lessons she is teaching delivery techniques as well as the proper methods of feeding, bathing and dressing infants. Upon completion of her course, the Chief feels, his cops will be ready for any household emergency.

But to the men on the force the training has its somber side. "If my wife ever gets wind of this," one of them was heard to remark, "I will surely be doomed to a life in the kitchen."

Anticipating emergency calls from expectant mothers and harassed housewives, policemen get final exam in which they are required to change, bathe babies, then coo them to sleep. THE END.

World War II veterans of the U. S. Air Force will recognize an old friend when they see this strange plane flying over New Jersey's marshes. It's a B-17 with turbine engine.

"Flying Laboratory"

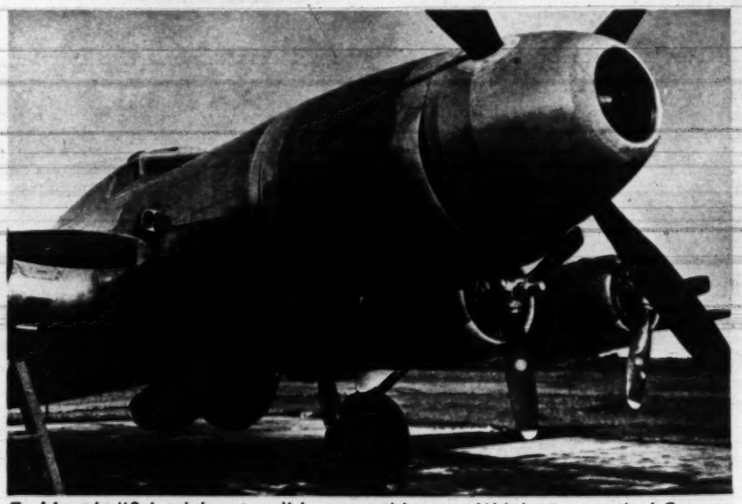
Engineers use Flying Fortress as airborne proving ground

THE FAMED B-17, first of America's flying fortresses in World War II, has taken to the air again—this time in the interests of peacetime science.

Under Army supervision, the Wright Aeronautical Corporation has been working for months at its Wood-Ridge, N. J., factories on a huge "flying laboratory," built around a wartime B-17 to test the adaptability of a revolutionary turbine aircraft engine to practical post-war flying.

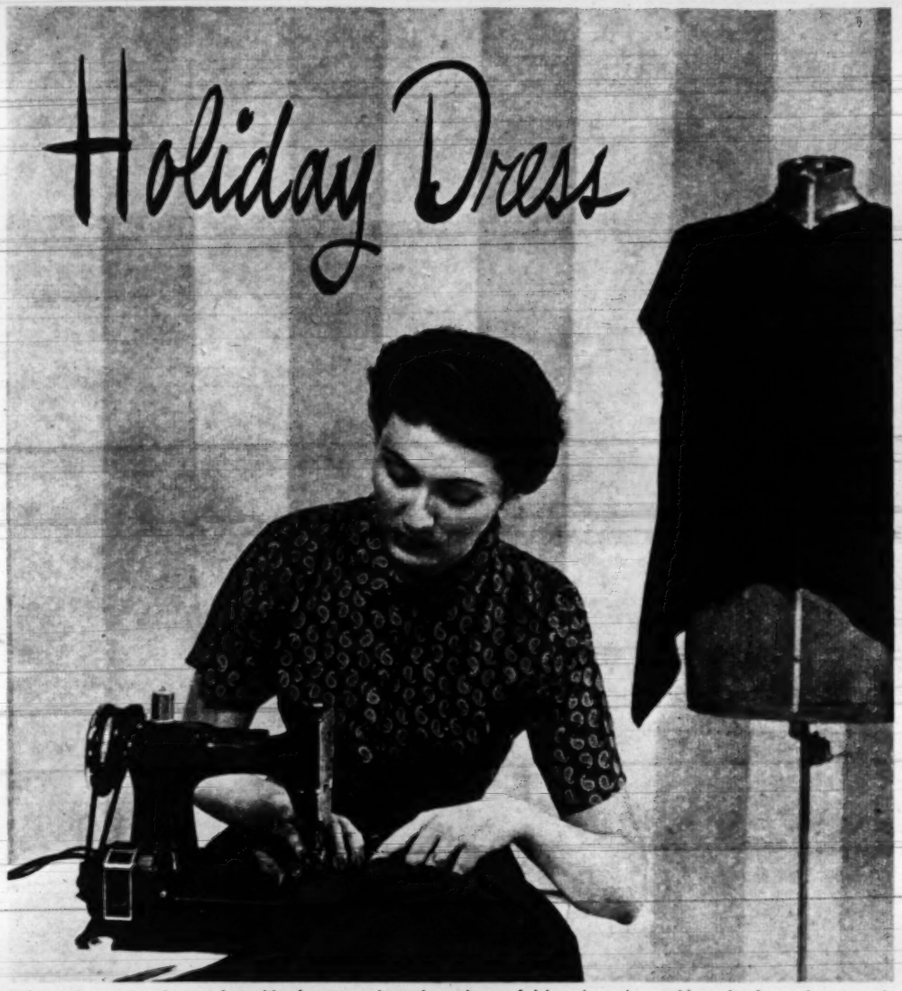
Although details of the new engine remain cloaked in official secrecy, photographs of the re-designed plane disclose that the high-powered turbine has been installed in the nose of the B-17, replacing the bombardier's section. To accommodate the new engine, the nose has been extended, giving the plane the appearance of a giant, winged cigar belching clouds of smoke.

In their re-built B-17, Wright engineers now may test their new engine with its four-bladed propeller not only on the ground but in the air as well.



Turbine, in "flying laboratory," is mounted in nose. Wright Aeronautical Compan engineers are using plane for altitude testing of engine and its propellers. THE END

Holiday Dress



First step: Make drawstring skirt from two lengths of crepe; for top, take piece of material 42 inches long, fold on length, cut V-neck, shape in towards waist, leaving 7-inch-deep ties on front piece.

You can make it in a day

Stole, apron, pockets will alter basic style

AS THE CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS approach, every woman wants a new dress. There'll be parties galore, some formal and fancy, some quiet-at-home gatherings. The problem: to find one dress suitable for every occasion—one which will not put too great a strain on pocketbooks already limp from gift-shopping.

PARADE conferred with fashion experts, discovered that not even Santa Claus could beat the magic of a basic dress for Christmas-through-New Year's-wear. The next move was to design a basic dress that could be made quickly. (There are only three more weeks for sewing machines to whirr!) On this page and the next, you will see the result: a wonderful, two-piece dress, flattering in its softly-draped simplicity, adaptable to any age or size. Made of Celanese Chamalure crepe in a holly-wreath green, it can be changed radically in appearance by the addition of a dramatic stole, a bouffant apron or eye-catching, outsize pockets, all of contrasting materials. Or the dress may be worn with glittering touches of jewelry at the neck or waistline as its only adornment.

Actually, no pattern is required for the dress or its accessories. Three and a quarter yards will make a dress fitting sizes 12 to 16. Anyone, versed in sewing, can make the whole outfit in a day.

Big "carpenter's pockets," suspended on a narrow belt, are gay touch for afternoon wear. Two-thirds of yard of Celanese Plaid Multicord, cut in 12-inch squares, self-faced, are required.

ABOUT ENSIGN AND MRS. OGILVIE—

It all began at an Annapolis hop. It was love at first dance. Charles couldn't resist Betty's beautiful complexion. "My very first cake of Camay made my skin softer and smoother," says she.

At Coney Island—on their first trip to New York—Betty and Charles won all kinds of prizes! A prize-winner for beauty too, Betty helps keep her complexion romantically lovely with the Camay Mild-Soap Diet.

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

By BETH MERRIMAN
PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

The young fry will love a Christmas Cookie Tree and ice cream party during the holidays.

A hard wood springerle board makes clear-cut designs on special dough. The squares are cut out with sharp knife.

Christmas cookie dough may be shaped in a roll, wrapped in waxed paper, chilled thoroughly, sliced and baked.

Cookie dough also may be rolled out and cut with special Christmas cutters—trees, stars, wreaths, Santa Claus.

Christmas Cookies

CHRISTMAS is coming — and it wouldn't be Christmas without tempting home-made cookies. Begin with Springerle which need time to ripen. Decorate other cookies with candy sprills held in place with egg white.

TO MAKE A COOKIE CHRISTMAS TREE:

Cut out eight star shaped cookies in graduated sizes, ranging from eight inches down to one inch. Cut 16 small round cookies to be used between the star-shaped cookies. Cut a small hole in the center of each cookie. Bake as directed. Frost stars with white or colored sugar frosting and sprinkle with multi-colored sprills, silver dragées and red cinnamon candies. Support a slender round stick firmly on a small square or round base so that it will stand. Cover base with ribbon. Slip the largest star on stick and anchor with some of the frosting. Next, place two small round cookies on the stick and then the next size star, and so on, alternating points of stars to get the effect of tree branches and anchoring to stick with frosting between cookies. If a small portion of stick remains, place a small ball of fondant or hard frosting over it and cover with silver dragées or stand two small star cookies upright, as illustrated.

SPRINGERLE

4 eggs	4½ cups sifted cake flour
1 lb. powdered sugar	1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon lemon extract	aniseeds

Beat eggs until light. Stir in sugar; beat until thoroughly combined. Add lemon extract. Mix and sift flour and baking powder; add; mix thoroughly. Chill 1 hour; roll out ½-inch thick on floured board; cut into fancy shapes with cookie cutters or use springerle board to press designs in dough, then cut out cookies with a sharp knife. Grease cookie sheets; sprinkle with aniseeds. Arrange cookies on sheets. Bake in moderate oven, 350° F., 30 minutes. Cool; store in covered jar for two or three weeks before serving. Makes about 42.

CHRISTMAS COOKIES

5 cups sifted all-purpose flour	2 cups sugar
3 teaspoons baking powder	2 eggs
1 teaspoon salt	2 teaspoons vanilla
1 cup shortening	2 tbsp. cream or milk

Sift together flour, baking powder and salt. Cream shortening and sugar. Add eggs, vanilla and cream. Stir in flour mixture. Chill thoroughly. Roll out on lightly floured board ¼ inch thick. Cut in desired shapes. Bake on greased cookie sheets in moderate oven, 375° F., 10 min.

Modern, functional multi-purpose room is a combination study, living and dining quarters with large windows as focal point. Floor is surfaced with stained linoleum.

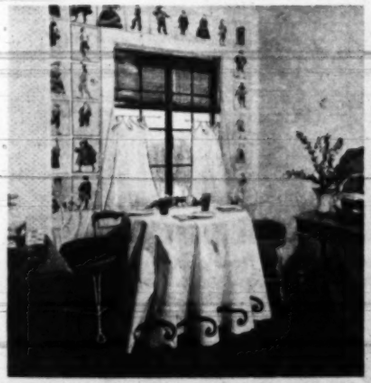
Enliven Your Home

Two decorators give new zest to house furnishings

THAT MOST AMERICAN housewives are interior decorators at heart is a fact long familiar to their mates—and one which in recent years has provided a comfortable living for authors of books.

Latest in a long line of volumes devoted to face-lifting the inside of a home is "Fashions in Furnishings"* by Ruth W. Lee and Louise T. Bolender, two interior decorators who believe that the focal point of living is the home.

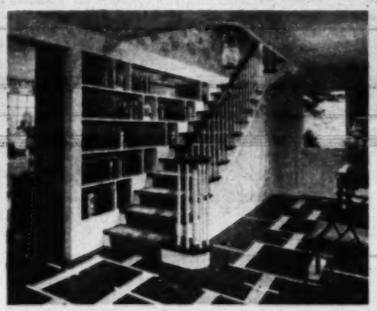
Most of the 214 pages of "Fashions in Furnishings" are devoted to a detailed account of the authors' theory that simplicity in a home is a virtue, that the less cluttered a home is made, the more liveable it becomes. Mrs. Lee and Mrs. Bolender believe in modern kitchens, simple bedrooms, small dining rooms and unencumbered living quarters. The function of a modern home, they hold, shouldn't be hampered by doo-dads borrowed from the past.



Russian ballet prints frame window in this cheerful dinette cut from living room.

Berth-type beds utilize limited free space in small bedroom. Rug is braided cotton.

Cluttered old-fashioned parlors have been replaced by a modern living room.



Geometric inlaid linoleum gives feeling of spaciousness to limited space. THE END.

*"Fashions in Furnishings" by Ruth W. Lee and Louise T. Bolender, Whittlesey House, N. Y., $5.95.

Enthralled, youngsters at the annual toy exhibit of the Erie (Pa.) Public Museum admire playthings of grandfather's day. Iron hook and ladder wagon and pumper date from about 1900. Old-fashioned iron toys such as these now are valued up to $125 each.

Museum stages historic exhibit

THE DOLLS AND QUAINT IRON TOYS that delighted the children of pioneers in Erie, Pa., are capturing the hearts of youngsters today. One of the high points of the year for Erie's moppets is the annual toy exhibit at the Erie Public Museum. They gaze in open-mouthed wonder at the fascinating collection of 400 toys that belonged to children who came to Erie in covered wagons. There are exquisite china dolls dating from 1800, mechanical walking dolls, droll German "noddin' heads," tiny iron stoves, high-stacked locomotives and resplendent fire engines with galloping horses.

Had it not been for a high school science instructor with an enthusiasm for local history, these toys might have kept on gathering dust in Erie attics. In 1942, John A. Alexick reorganized the high school science courses. Because of his success, he was asked to do a reorganization job for the museum and was made director. He decided that one of the best sources of material for an exhibit of Americana would be Erie itself. The town was founded in 1795 and has a rich historical heritage. Accordingly, Alexick appealed to the citizens to rummage through their attics for antiques that would tell the story of Erie's early days. Among the many valuable heirlooms donated was the unique collection of dolls and toys.

Museum Established in 1897

Opened in 1897, the museum is now housed in the family home of F. F. Curtze, donated for that purpose in 1941 by heirs to the estate. Its collection of pictures and objects of historical and scientific interest comprises more than 60,000 items, valued at $158,000. The museum also houses a school visual-aids library, offers art and handicraft classes for children and is used for community meetings and concerts. The people of Erie feel that the museum really belongs to them. There is no endowment fund, and every item in the 15 display rooms is a personal gift of individuals and families of the historic "Erie Country."

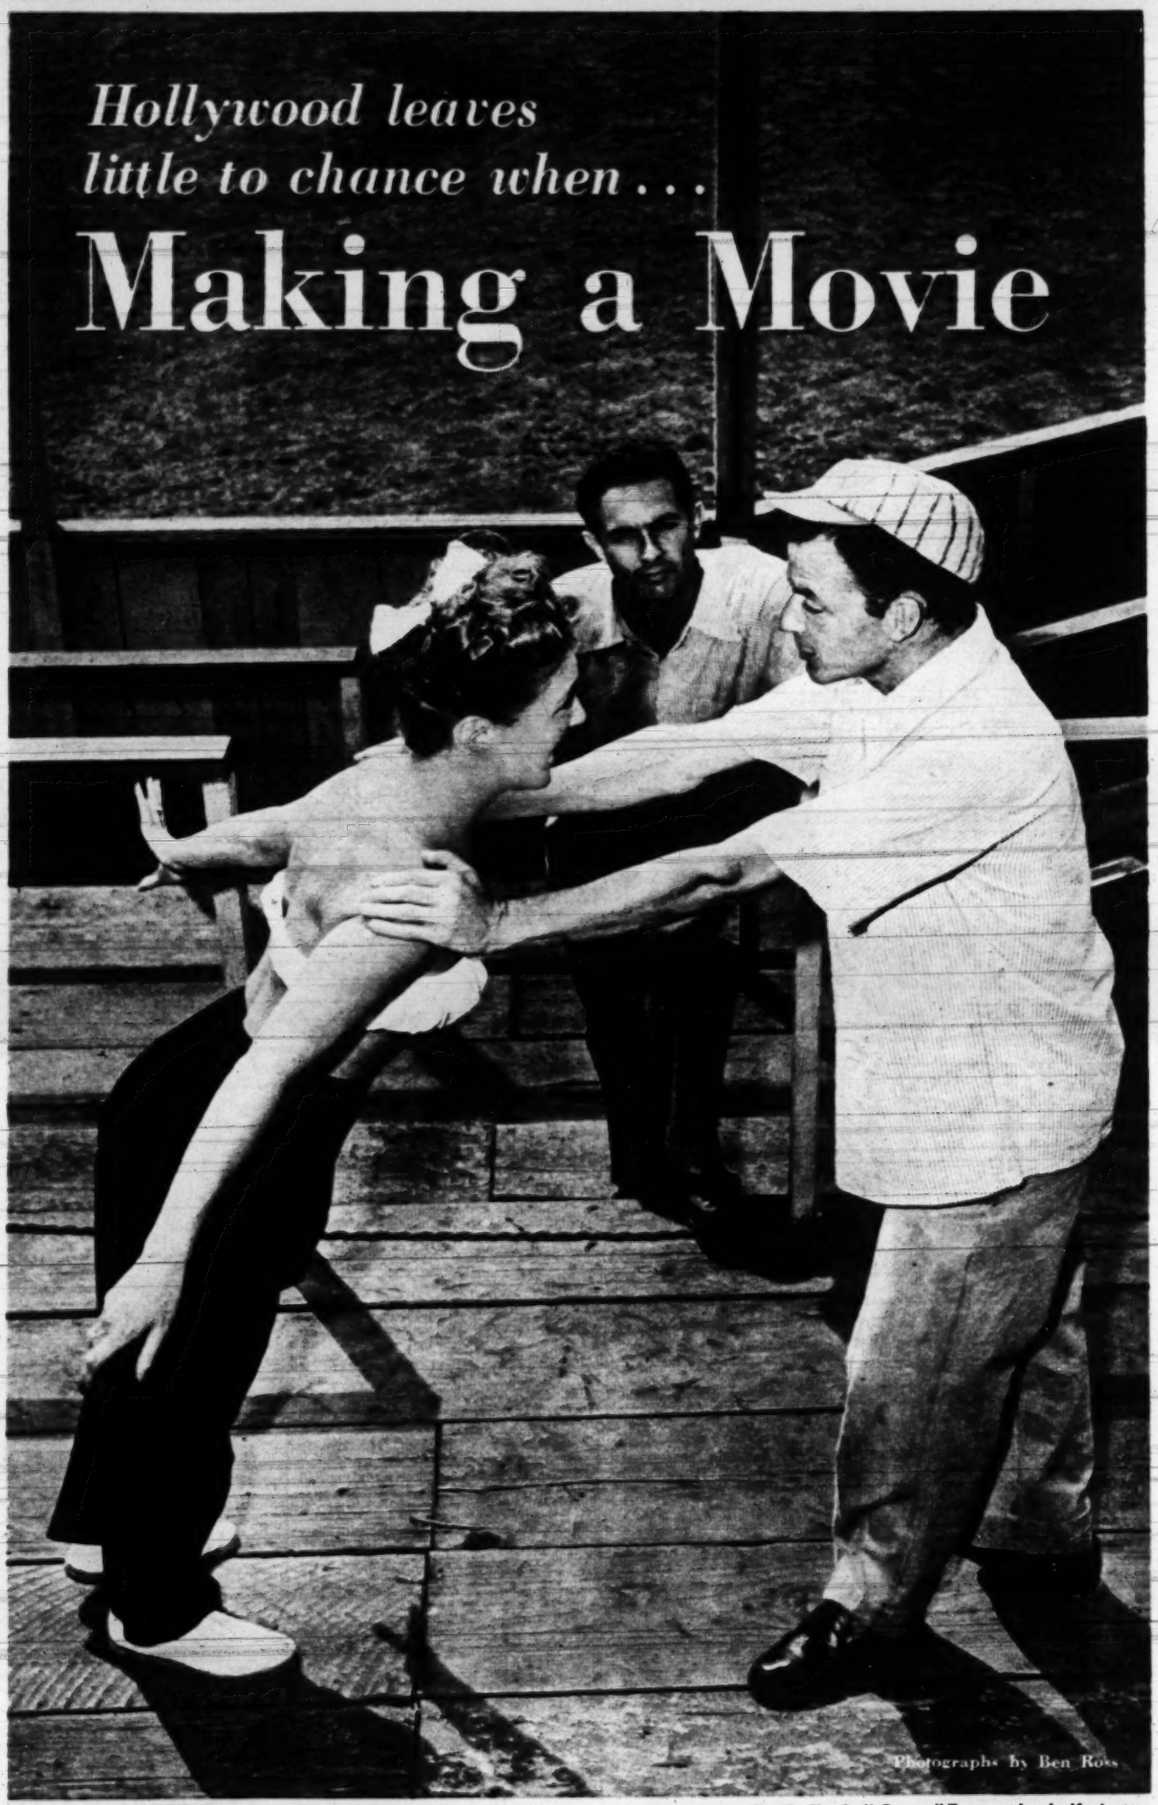
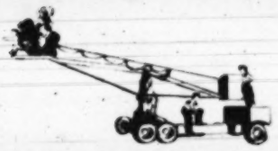
Making a Movie



Photographs by Ben Ross

Moviemaking: Betty Garrett and Frank Sinatra rehearse $38,000 "It's Fate, Baby, It's Fate" scene in MGM's $2,000,000 Technicolor musical "Take Me Out To The Ball Game." Two-and-a-half minutes of entertainment took months of planning and intricate work.



Two-and-a-half minute scene took two-day rehearsal and small fortune to put on screen

By ERNEST LA FRANCE and SID ROSS

Continuing its authoritative series on Hollywood and the motion picture industry, future issues of PARADE will tell about its specialists, its problems, what its critics think about it at present, and what the prophets are predicting for the future. Kay Sullivan, Movie Editor, PARADE.

FOR TWO-AND-A-HALF MINUTES, sometime this winter, moviegoers who drop in on MGM's $2,000,000 Technicolor musical "Take Me Out To The Ball Game" will see mantrap Betty Garrett chase Frank Sinatra around the bleachers of a 1906 ball park while moving her mouth in the apparent act of singing "It's Fate, Baby, It's Fate." Several million fans will go away thinking they have witnessed one of the most artless scenes of the season.

What they will actually be seeing is a carefully manufactured bit of moviemaking costing over $15,000 a minute to film, involving several days of planning, two whole days of rehearsal by over 60 people (not including the acting talent), and the contents of a bag of cinematic tricks virtually unsuspected outside Hollywood.

If, for any reason, you are considering grinding out your own epics instead of depending on the stuff you see on your neighborhood screen, it might be handy to know how to go about it. Hollywood has ground out upwards of 50,000 of them, and has a lot to teach.

Single Scene is a Major Production

There are few finer laboratory specimens than the Garrett-Sinatra love chase through the one dollar seats. Only one of the 167 scenes in the baseball extravaganza concocted by MGM dancer Gene Kelly and dance director Stanley Donen (about 65 per cent of all movie ideas originate in the studios), it is the end result of a process so well departmentalized that it is literally a small movie all by itself.

It first saw the light of day as a few pages of a bulky scenario, turned out by MGM staff writers, in which a pair of combination vaudeville hoofers-baseball players (Kelly and Sinatra) get mixed up with a lady team owner (Esther Williams) and a gamblers' moll (Betty Garrett). Donen, who helped think it up, was appointed to direct it. $38,000 of the whole movie's $2,000,000 was earmarked to put it on celluloid. It became officially known as "Production 1432, Exterior Ball Park."

With an identity—almost a life—of its own, the two-and-a-half minute scene moved on to final completion.

Birth of scene starts in Script Department with 180 mimeographed copies of scenario and camera cues.

Budget estimator (in MGM's case, Joseph Finn, above), goes over script, allots $38,000 for scene.

Legal research head, Ruth De Saxe, and music expert Rudi Monte study songs for possible plagiarism.

Research Dep't chief Leo Linder, with 12,000 books and old periodicals to go by, checks styles of 1906.

Construction shop foremen Bill Crane and Andy MacDonald build set designed by Art Department.

Stars Betty Garrett and Frank Sinatra record songs beforehand in soundproof room inside MGM studio.

Action for two-and-one-half-minute scene starts at 9:00 a.m. with lights and Technicolor crew dwarfing stars. Ball park, in MGM Culver City lot, is carefully decked with 1906 "Sweet Caporal" cigarette ads.

Make-up, shortly after breakfast, took hour-and-a-half for single scene. Special Technicolor make-up, put on by specialist Charlie Schram, turns plain Betty Garrett of rehearsal into beauty.

Long, hard work goes

Unsung carpenter, Henry Dane, waxes ball park railing for Sinatra to slide down on.

Sound-mixer James Flaster and music-expert Harry Lojewski ready loud speaker.

Back of madness is method

THE METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER STUDIO, so efficient that it is known around Hollywood as "The Factory," went to work on its two-and-a-half minutes of music and fluff with the methodical advance of an auto plant turning out a new radiator cap.

Smart, sophisticated song-writers Betty Comden and Adolph Green were told to write suitable lyrics. Tunesmith Roger Eden supplied the music. Donen worked out the manhungry leaps over the benches, climaxed by a slide (by Sinatra) down a slippery railing. The Research Department, laboriously digging through its files, came up with bona fide 1906 costumes. Ray June, a veteran MGM cameraman, was put in charge of shooting. He in turn picked out his assistant cameraman and chief electrician.

However natural Garrett and Sinatra may seem on the screen singing their ditty about Fate, the cold fact is that they recorded it in a soundproof studio while the carpenters were still adding suitable bleachers to the ball park set in Culver City. Hollywood has discovered that even Betty Garrett does not sing her best while roughhousing on a flight of steps, and prefers to play safe. The recording was carefully planned to coincide with the still unfilmed action, with high-pitched "pips" inserted into the music to serve as actors' cues during shooting.

With the ball park almost ready, but the costumes still in the hands of the dressmakers, the stars, camera crews, sound truck and director put in two strenuous days of rehearsal to match the action to the songs. Betty Garrett ran up and down the bleachers

Betty Garrett and Frank Sinatra gambol effortlessly through musical

"It's time you made up your mind not to stall with me, start playing ball with me . . . Your future isn't shapeable . . . It's inescapable."

"If you should run to China or to Turkey, Sweden or Mars . . . It doesn't matter where you'd be, a force would pull you back to me."

"It's Fate, Baby, It's Fate. And it's knocking at our doors . . . It's Fate, Baby, and that's the reason you're mine and I'm yours."

for an estimated total of five miles, caught Sinatra repeatedly.

Actual shooting began at 9 a.m. the third morning, but the entire company, augmented by make-up artists, grips, laborers, wardrobe women, cooks, and a special Technicolor crew, were at the studio at 7:30, at the ball park by 8:00. Big self-propelled camera booms rolled up to the action stage. Huge lights (necessary even in bright sunshine) jockeyed into position, with cables and wires snaking in from over home plate.

Bit by bit, almost word by word and leap by leap, the brief scene was put together—long shots, close-ups, "dolly" shots, and pan (moving) shots. At the right cues, Betty Garrett silently mouthed the words of "It's Fate, Baby, It's Fate," in unison with her own voice coming in over the loud speaker. Sinatra, trying to escape, slid for the hundredth time down the rail.

It took, even in shooting, far longer than two and a half minutes. After each "take" the crew opened and inspected the camera to see that there were no punches, scratches or dirt on the film. A color expert fiddled with the color-corrected lights used in Technicolor work, checked the scene every time a cloud went over the sky. Racing against time (both stars were due on another set for another scene at 5 p.m.), the company squeezed in the last shot just before quitting time.

Before midnight, the scene, shot by shot, was developed in the processing lab, ready to be pieced together by the film editor and cutter. Weeks later, with its best shots dovetailed smoothly together to make a smooth two and a half minutes, it was inserted in the completed movie with the 166 other, independently shot scenes. You can make your own movies, but it is tough work.

Canine Studies Win Awards

AFTER WINNERS had been declared in a recent dog photograph contest, one fact became obvious to the judges: amateur contestants took better pictures of dogs than did the professionals.

From the standpoint of technique and warm, human interest, the amateurs observed a few simple rules and won.

Here are the more important rules: the dog must look his best, well groomed and healthy. Picture background should be simple, contrasting in color to dog's. Standing shots should be posed for a three-quarter view. Finally, imagination and patience pay off—especially in photographing playful, active puppies.

Prize picture of a dachshund contemplating a journey was shot by George Haas, Chappaqua, N. Y.

I DON'T GET IT, CHOPS! THESE FIFTH COLUMN HUSTLERS ARE SNUBBING US—THEY'RE FIRING AT SOMEONE DOWN IN THE COURTYARD.

OL' CHOPS LIKES BEING IGNORED RIGHT NOW. M' HAIR'S STILL IN A TIGHT CURL FROM THE GRENADE THOSE GOONS TOSSED AT US ON THAT BALCONY. IF YOU HADN'T KICKED IT INTO A DOORWAY BEFORE IT BLASTED...BRRR!

BLAST IT! WHOEVER THE FELLOW IS, HIS LUCK IS EXTRAORDINARY. HE STAGGERS INTO THE OPEN RIGHT AFTER MY GRENADE EXPLODES—I EMPTY A RIFLE AT HIM AND HE STILL RUNS.

THIS IS A NIGHTMARE! LOCKED IN A ROOM... EXPLOSION BLOWS DOOR OFF...WHEN I COME OUT, COMRADE VALENTINE SHOOTS AT ME... HE'S TRYING TO LIQUIDATE ME...I MUST GET AWAY...THEY MUST LET ME THROUGH THE GATE.

OPEN UP, YOU PIGS! I MUST GET AWAY FROM HERE.

I DO NOT UNDERSTAND THE FOREIGN COMRADE'S TONGUE, BUT HE APPEARS AGITATED AND MOTIONS FOR US TO OPEN THE GATE.

OH, DEAR! VALENTINE AND HIS MEN WILL BE HERE... OPEN UP, I SAY!

PERHAPS THE FOREIGN COMRADE IS ON A MISSION OF GREAT IMPORTANCE. WE HAD BETTER...

TELL ME, PAL, HAVE WE MET BEFORE?

I CAN ONLY STAY A MINUTE, I HAVE TO START MY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING.

OH!

I SHOULDN'T HAVE LET IT GO SO LONG.

NO.

YOU WERE WISE BUYING YOUR GIFTS THROUGHOUT THE YEAR THE WAY YOU DID.

YES.

YOU AVOID THIS LAST MINUTE RUSH, YOU RUN INTO WONDERFUL BARGAINS AND YOU SAVE SO MUCH TIME AND NERVE STRAIN.

UH HUH.

IT MUST BE A WONDERFUL FEELING TO KNOW THAT YOUR PRESENTS ARE BOUGHT AND WRAPPED AND READY TO HAND OUT.

UM HUM.

WAIT A MINUTE LONGER, AUNT ELLEN, AND I'LL GO WITH YOU.

OH, YOU'RE JUST GOING TO KEEP ME COMPANY?

DEC. 5, 1948

DID YOU MAKE AN APPOINTMENT WITH THE DENTIST TO HAVE YOUR TOOTH EXTRACTED, PHILIP?

NO—IT'S STOPPED ACHING!

IT'LL ONLY START ACHING AGAIN, UNCLE PHIL! WHY DON'T YOU HAVE IT TAKEN OUT TODAY?

NO, MICHAEL—I'M GONNA WAIT UNTIL AFTER THE ANNUAL BEEFSTEAK DINNER AT THE LODGE!

THE DINNER ISN'T UNTIL NEXT WEEK, PHIL—IF THE TOOTH IS BOTHERING YOU, YOU'RE VERY FOOLISH TO WAIT!

IT ONLY BOTHERS ME WHEN I DRINK SOMETHIN' COLD, SERGEANT!—AND THEN IT ONLY ACHES FOR A SECOND!

IF YOU HAD IT OUT TODAY, PHIL, IT WOULD BE ALL HEALED UP BEFORE THE DINNER!

IT MIGHT NOT, MURPHY—AND AFTER PAYIN' FOUR DOLLARS FOR A TICKET, I'M NOT GONNA TAKE ANY CHANCES!

I'D HAVE IT TAKEN CARE OF RIGHT AWAY, DINNER OR NO DINNER! IT MIGHT GET ULSTERATED!

THERE'S NO DANGER OF THAT! I HAVEN'T EVEN FELT IT FOR THREE DAYS!

WELL, WITH THE DINNER BEIN' TOMORROW NIGHT, I CAN SEE WHY YOU'VE GOT TO WAIT NOW—BUT I WOULDN'T WAIT TOO LONG!

AS A MATTER OF FACT, SCHULTZ, I'M GONNA WAIT UNTIL SPRING! IT ISN'T BOTHERIN' ME AT ALL ANY MORE!

WELL, PHIL, TONIGHT'S THE NIGHT OF THE DINNER—HOW'S THE TOOTH?

WHAT TOOTH?

THEN YOU DON'T THINK THERE EVER WAS ANYTHING WRONG WITH IT?

NOTHIN' WHATEVER! I'M CONVINCED IT WAS JUST A LITTLE COLD IN MY JAW!

I WAS JUST WONDERIN' IF YOU WANTED ME TO STOP AT THE HOUSE FOR YOU!

NO THANKS, CLANCY! I'LL WALK OVER! IT'LL PUT MY APPETITE RIGHT ON EDGE!

I WONDER WHY HE DIDN'T GET HERE, CLANCY?

I DON'T KNOW! SOMETHIN' MUST'VE COME UP!

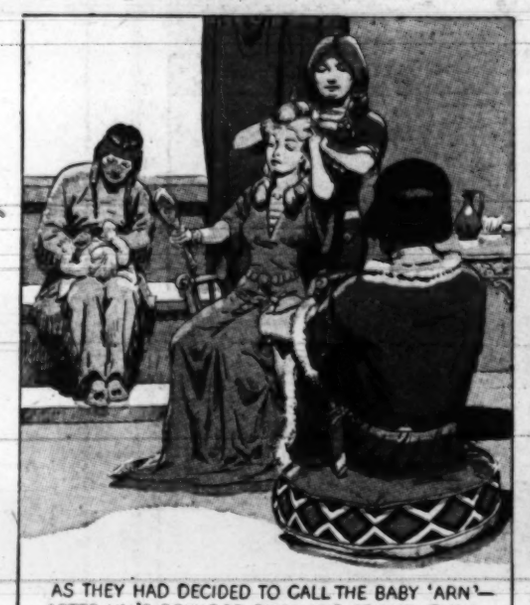
Prince Valiant

IN THE DAYS OF KING ARTHUR

BY HAROLD R FOSTER

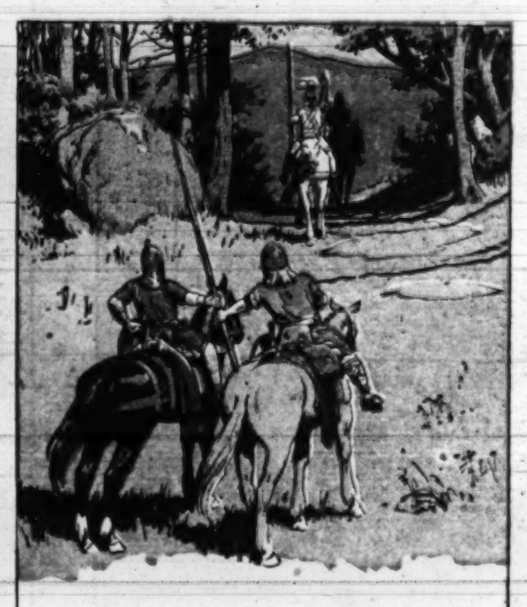
Synopsis: PRINCE VALIANT'S BUSINESS HAS FALLEN OFF; THERE ARE ONLY A FEW MINOR WARS THAT THE YOUNGER KNIGHTS CAN WELL TAKE CARE OF, THE CALENDAR OF QUESTS IS BLANK, AND VAL FINDS TIME TO GET THOROUGHLY ENCHANTED AGAIN.

"AND NOW, DEAR MASTER, IT IS TIME WE CONSIDERED THE CHRISTENING OF OUR SON AND THE CHOICE OF A GODFATHER" (ALETA ALWAYS CALLS HER SLAVE 'MASTER'; IT PLEASES THEM BOTH).



AS THEY HAD DECIDED TO CALL THE BABY 'ARN'— AFTER VAL'S BOYHOOD RIVAL AND FRIEND, THE HIGH-HEARTED LAD WHO HAD GIVEN HIM THE 'SINGING SWORD'—ARN SHOULD BE GODFATHER.

VAL ARMS FOR THE JOURNEY TO ORD, FOR IT IS THE CUSTOM TO JOUST WITH ANY KNIGHT ONE MAY MEET.



ALL GOES WELL UNTIL THEY ARE WITHIN A SHORT DISTANCE OF ORD WHERE PRINCE ARN LIVES; THEN THEY ARE CHALLENGED.

AFTER A FEW PASSES VAL UNHORSES HIS POWERFUL OPPONENT, WHO, SCRAMBLING TO HIS FEET, WHIPS OUT HIS SWORD ANGRILY, A SIGN THAT HE WISHES TO CONTINUE THE CONTEST!

COPR. 1948 KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, Inc. WORLD RIGHTS RESERVED.

NOW THE AFFAIR TAKES ON A MORE SERIOUS ASPECT. VAL DISMOUNTS AND DRAWS THE SHINING LENGTH OF THE 'SINGING SWORD' FROM ITS SCABBARD.

BUT HIS ADVERSARY STICKS HIS SWORD IN THE TURF AND FOLDS HIS ARMS. "HOW DID YOU COME BY THAT SWORD?" HE DEMANDS.

NEXT WEEK – "Win It!"
